Executive Summary

South Korea's security posture from March 14 to March 21, 2026, was primarily shaped by heightened tensions with North Korea, ongoing large-scale joint military exercises with the United States, and the broader geopolitical implications of the Middle East conflict. North Korea conducted a significant ballistic missile launch in response to the allied drills, while increasing construction activities along the Demilitarized Zone. Concurrently, South Korea navigated complex diplomatic relations, seeking stability in Northeast Asia amidst US-China rivalry and expressing concerns over the redeployment of US air defense systems to the Middle East. Cybersecurity remained a critical domestic concern following a series of high-profile data breaches and government hacking attempts.

Key Security Developments

- North Korea's Ballistic Missile Launches

On March 14, 2026, North Korea launched approximately 10 unidentified ballistic missiles from its Sunan area towards the Sea of Japan (East Sea) around 1:20 p.m.. This launch was a direct and aggressive response to the ongoing annual South Korea-US military exercises, signaling Pyongyang's continued defiance and its intent to advance its military capabilities. The missiles reportedly fell outside Japan's exclusive economic zone, prompting an emergency response from the Japanese government.

- Conclusion of Freedom Shield 2026 Joint Military Exercises

The annual US-South Korea joint military exercise, Freedom Shield (FS26), concluded on March 19, 2026, after running from March 9. The drills involved approximately 18,000 South Korean troops and an unconfirmed number of US forces, focusing on enhancing combined defense posture and deterring North Korea's weapons of mass destruction (WMDs). A notable event during the exercise was a wet gap-crossing drill conducted by US and South Korean forces in Yeoncheon, South Korea, on March 14, 2026, demonstrating capabilities for transporting personnel and equipment across water obstacles.

- US Air Defense System Redeployment to Middle East

South Korean President Lee Jae Myung confirmed on March 10, 2026, that the United States was redeploying some of its air defense systems, specifically Terminal High Altitude Area Defense (THAAD) and Patriot batteries, from South Korea to the Middle East to support its escalating war with Iran. While South Korea expressed opposition to the move, President Lee stated that Seoul could not entirely impose its opinion but affirmed that the transfer would not significantly impact South Korea's deterrence capabilities against North Korea, given the substantial gap in conventional military power.

- Increased North Korean Border Activity

Satellite imagery and South Korea's military reports indicate that North Korea has been increasing construction activity in frontline border areas near the Demilitarized Zone (DMZ). This includes the installation of suspected anti-tank barriers, reinforcement of roads, and the planting of landmines, suggesting a hardening of its stance and a potential increase in defensive or provocative measures along the inter-Korean border.

- South Korea's Cybersecurity Challenges and Regulatory Overhaul

South Korea continues to face significant cybersecurity threats, with a recent surge in large-scale hacking incidents and data breaches targeting major domestic telecom companies (e.g., SK Telecom, KT) and large platform operators (e.g., Coupang). The government is undertaking a fundamental reassessment and overhaul of its cybersecurity regulatory framework, with the National Cybersecurity Strategy and Basic Plan having been revised in 2024 to bolster offensive cyber defense and critical infrastructure resilience. The AI Framework Act, effective January 22, 2026, also imposes safety obligations on AI operators.

- South Korea-Japan Finance Ministerial Dialogue

On March 14, 2026, the 10th Japan-Korea Finance Ministerial Dialogue was held in Tokyo, where finance ministers from both countries discussed global and regional economies, economic security, and bilateral cooperation. They expressed serious concern over the recent sharp depreciation of the Korean won and the Japanese yen, pledging to closely monitor foreign exchange markets and take appropriate actions against excessive volatility.

- South Korea's Role in Northeast Asian Diplomacy

South Korean Foreign Minister Cho Hyun stated that Seoul aims to play a "constructive role" in fostering peace and development in Northeast Asia, particularly amid deepening tensions between Japan and China. President Lee Jae Myung's early 2026 trips to Japan and China underscore South Korea's efforts to prioritize dialogue and balance its alliance with the US with constructive relations with China.

- US-South Korea Economic Cooperation on Strategic Industries

On March 12, 2026, South Korea's parliament approved a significant $350 billion investment bill targeting US strategic industries. This landmark economic cooperation deal focuses on sectors such as semiconductors, artificial intelligence, energy, pharmaceuticals, critical minerals, and quantum computing, aiming to strengthen economic ties and reshape global supply chains and technology competition.

- Defense Policy Focus on Modernization and North Korea Deterrence

Defense Minister Ahn Kyu-baek, on March 17, 2026, outlined the Ministry of National Defense's priorities, including securing overseas-deployed units and maintaining an enhanced surveillance and guard posture toward North Korea in close cooperation with the US. The ministry is committed to methodically implementing its 2026 defense policy to build a modern, technologically advanced force that earns public trust.

- North Korea's "Permanently Hostile Relationship" and US Dialogue Prospects

North Korea formalized a "permanently hostile relationship" with South Korea on February 21, 2026, and continues to view US-South Korea joint exercises as invasion rehearsals. While North Korean leader Kim Jong Un suggested potential dialogue with the US if his country's nuclear status is accepted and sanctions are removed, the US maintains its denuclearization stance. US President Donald Trump reportedly discussed a possible meeting with Kim Jong Un with South Korean Prime Minister Kim Min-seok on March 14, 2026, indicating a continued, albeit complex, diplomatic channel.

Geopolitical Impact and Regional Dynamics

South Korea's security developments during this period underscore its precarious position amidst escalating regional and global tensions. North Korea's ballistic missile launches, directly responding to the Freedom Shield exercises, highlight the persistent and unpredictable threat from Pyongyang, compelling South Korea and its allies to continuously adapt their defensive strategies. This cycle of provocation and deterrence reinforces the militarization of the Korean Peninsula and complicates any prospects for diplomatic breakthroughs, especially given North Korea's declared "permanently hostile relationship" with the South and its conditions for dialogue with the US.

The redeployment of US air defense systems from South Korea to the Middle East, while deemed manageable by Seoul, signals the broader impact of the ongoing conflict in the Middle East on East Asian security dynamics. This move could be perceived as a strain on US resources and potentially raise questions about the steadfastness of US commitments in the Indo-Pacific, even as the US National Defense Strategy (NDS) 2026 aims to pivot the US-South Korea alliance towards a broader regional role beyond peninsula-focused deterrence. South Korea is increasingly expected to take primary responsibility for deterring North Korea, while also becoming a key security and defense production partner for US Indo-Pacific strategy.

In its diplomatic efforts, South Korea is actively seeking to mediate tensions between China and Japan, demonstrating a desire to maintain regional stability amidst great power competition. This "constructive role" reflects Seoul's delicate balancing act between its crucial security alliance with the United States and its significant economic ties with China. The substantial $350 billion investment deal with the US in strategic industries further solidifies the US-South Korea alliance economically and technologically, potentially influencing global supply chains and advanced technology competition. However, the call from US President Trump for South Korea to contribute to securing the Strait of Hormuz also highlights South Korea's increasing entanglement in global security challenges beyond its immediate region.

Military and Defense Analysis

South Korea's military and defense posture during this period reflects a dual focus on immediate deterrence against North Korea and long-term modernization. The successful execution of the Freedom Shield 2026 exercises, involving approximately 18,000 South Korean troops, demonstrated the robust combined defense capabilities with the United States, particularly in areas like wet gap-crossing operations. The exercises are crucial for maintaining readiness and interoperability, especially as North Korea continues its missile development and hostile rhetoric. The public demonstration of the US Army's Indirect Fire Protection Capability (IFPC), deployed to US forces in South Korea in September 2025, signifies an enhanced defense against low-altitude threats such as drones, adding a new layer to the alliance's protective measures.

Despite the redeployment of some US THAAD and Patriot air defense systems to the Middle East, South Korean President Lee Jae Myung asserted that the country's own defense spending and conventional capabilities far exceed those of North Korea, ensuring continued deterrence. This statement underscores South Korea's growing confidence in its indigenous defense capabilities and its commitment to defense autonomy. The Ministry of National Defense's 2026 policy emphasizes building a modern, technologically advanced force, aligning with the broader trend of increased investment in high-tech weapons, including AI, drones, and robots. South Korea's emergence as a major arms exporter, supplying 6.5% of arms imports to European NATO states in 2024 and aiming for significant deals in 2026, further highlights its robust defense industry and its ambition to become a global technology leader in defense.

Outlook and Forecast

Short-term trends (1-3 months): In the immediate future, tensions on the Korean Peninsula are likely to remain elevated. North Korea is expected to continue its pattern of military demonstrations and weapons testing, particularly in response to any perceived provocations or ongoing allied military activities. The conclusion of Freedom Shield 2026 may offer a brief respite, but North Korea's increased construction along the DMZ suggests a sustained hardening of its posture. Diplomatic efforts between the US and North Korea are unlikely to yield significant breakthroughs without a shift in Pyongyang's stance on denuclearization or Washington's willingness to accept North Korea's nuclear status. South Korea will likely continue its diplomatic balancing act in Northeast Asia, seeking to manage relations with China and Japan while reinforcing its alliance with the US. Cybersecurity threats will persist, necessitating ongoing vigilance and implementation of the revised regulatory framework.

Critical flashpoints and risk areas: The Demilitarized Zone (DMZ) and the Northern Limit Line (NLL) in the Yellow Sea remain critical flashpoints, with North Korea's increased border activities raising the risk of localized clashes or incidents. Any further North Korean missile launches, especially those involving advanced capabilities, could significantly escalate tensions and trigger stronger international condemnation. The ongoing war in the Middle East and the redeployment of US assets could create perceived vulnerabilities or miscalculations in the region, although South Korea maintains its deterrence capabilities are sufficient. The potential for cyberattacks targeting critical infrastructure or government networks remains a significant risk, given the recent history of breaches.

Indicators to monitor: Key indicators to monitor include the frequency and nature of North Korean missile tests and military exercises, particularly those involving new technologies or provocative trajectories. Any further significant construction or militarization efforts along the DMZ by North Korea should be closely watched. Diplomatic signals from Pyongyang regarding dialogue with the US or South Korea, as well as the outcomes of any high-level engagements, will be crucial. The stability of the Korean won and Japanese yen in foreign exchange markets, as discussed in the Japan-Korea Finance Ministerial Dialogue, will also be an economic indicator of regional stability. Finally, the effectiveness of South Korea's enhanced cybersecurity measures in preventing and responding to cyber threats will be a critical internal security indicator.

Strategic recommendations: South Korea should continue to strengthen its combined defense posture with the United States through regular and realistic military exercises, adapting to evolving North Korean threats. Investing further in indigenous defense capabilities, particularly in missile defense and counter-drone technologies, is essential to enhance self-reliance. Diplomatically, Seoul should maintain open channels of communication with all regional powers, including China and Japan, to de-escalate tensions and foster regional stability. Proactive measures to bolster cybersecurity across government and critical private sectors, including international cooperation on threat intelligence, are paramount. Furthermore, South Korea should continue to leverage its growing defense industry to forge strategic partnerships and contribute to regional and global security, while carefully managing the implications of US asset redeployments and broader geopolitical shifts.

- BTS comeback drives S. Korean newspapers to print special editions (2026-03-21 05:57)

South Korean newspapers released special weekend editions on Saturday, targeting fans arriving for K-pop giant BTS's first full-group concert after nearly four years. Major publications, including the Chosun Ilbo and Donga Ilbo, printed dedicated issues featuring its seven members, details about its new album, information regarding the concert venue at Gwanghwamun Square, and global fan interviews. Several papers that do not normally run Saturday editions, such as the Kyunghyang Shinmun, Hankyoreh, Seoul Shinmun, and Segye Times, also joined the print run. The Kyunghyang Shinmun dedicated a page to the lyrics of "

Swim," the lead track from BTS's new album, and its fandom's own way of cheering for the group during concerts. The Seoul Shinmun began distributing copies of a special edition in the Gwanghwamun area Friday. Business dailies and English-language publications, including the Korea Herald, also produced similar BTS-themed editions. Publishers said the single-run papers were intended as collectible merchandise to appeal to a fanbase recognized for its enthusiasm and purchasing power.

- Father and 4 children found dead in Ulsan, hamburgers were their last meal (2026-03-21 05:57)

Outside the apartment, behind police tape, a young child's bicycle was left alone at the entrance. "Not long ago, I saw the father putting the kids on the day care center bus in the morning. Whatever drove him to this," a neighbor said. "I never talked to him, but he always seemed troubled. It's heartbreaking what the circumstances were." A father in his 30s and his four young children were found dead in an apparent murder-suicide in Ulsan after welfare rules barred the cash-strapped family from receiving emergency government assistance. Police discovered the bodies in an apartment in Ulju County at 4:48 p.m. on Wednesday, two days after the estimated time of death. The discovery occurred after the eldest child's teacher reported the 7-year-old's repeated absences to police. The children — ages 7, 5, 3, and 5 months — showed no signs of physical injury or illness. Investigators suspect the family died from carbon monoxide poisoning around 9 p.m. on March 16. Police found burned charcoal briquettes inside the room, alongside hamburger wrappers believed to be from the family's last meal.

- BTS fans flock to Seoul overnight to get glimpse of K-pop megastar's comeback concert (2026-03-21 05:57)

Some global fans of K-pop sensation BTS flocked to downtown Seoul overnight to get a glimpse of their favorite idol group performing its long-awaited comeback at the heart of the capital city. "I didn't get tickets (for the show), but I spent the night here to be able to get a good view at close range," said a 31-year-old Philippine national who only gave his first name Sandy. Sandy said he came as soon as his work shift ended at 10 p.m. on Friday, noting that he could not book accommodation nearby due to excessively high prices. Other fans spent the night at nearby fast-food chains, with stores near Gwanghwamun Square booming with BTS fans eager to steal a moment of the special live performance. Brittany, a 19-year-old Malaysian student, said she and her friends had flocked to the area as soon as they wrapped up a pop rally event at Korea University the previous day. "None of us have tickets, so we're waiting until the live performance," she said. In contrast, the area near the main stage at Gwanghwamun Square was rather secluded, strictly marked by police lines to fend off non-ticket holders.

Bus and subway lines passing through downtown Seoul will be diverted Saturday to reduce traffic around the time of K-pop group BTS' comeback show at Gwanghwamun Square, officials said. The section of Sejong-daero connecting the square to City Hall has been closed to traffic since 9 p.m. Friday and will remain closed until 6 a.m. Sunday. Other roads in the neighborhood will be closed for parts of Saturday, such as 4 p.m. to 11 p.m. for Sajik-ro and Yulgok-ro, and 7 p.m. to 11 p.m. for Saemunan-ro and Gwanghwamun Underpass. At Gwanghwamun, City Hall and Gyeongbok Palace subway stations, some exits will be shut from 5 a.m., while starting at 2 p.m., all exits will be closed. Trains will not stop at the stations until as late as 10 p.m., after the concert ends. Buses traveling through Sejong-daero have been rerouted since Friday night, while those traveling on Sajik-ro and Saemunan-ro will be redirected starting at 4 p.m. Saturday. All bus lines will resume services at 11 p.m. Meanwhile, bike rental services and racks within 1 kilometer of the concert venue will be closed until 9 a.m. Sunday. 5

DAEJEON — At least 11 people have been killed in a large-scale fire at an automobile parts plant in the central city of Daejeon, authorities said Saturday. Rescue workers recovered the remains of an 11th victim from the charred wreckage of the plant around Saturday noon, they said. Three others remain missing, and at least 59 people were injured in the explosion, including two firefighters. A total of 170 workers were inside the plant when the fire was reported at around 1:17 p.m. Friday. Firefighters were earlier unable to enter the structure due to concerns it could collapse. Also complicating the firefighting effort were 200 kilograms of sodium inside the building, which could explode if poorly handled. The fire was fully extinguished after about 10 hours and 30 minutes, authorities said. Fire officials are now using heavy equipment to remove debris as they continue searching for missing people. The cause was not immediately known, but the blaze appeared to have spread rapidly, with witnesses reporting an explosion. President Lee Jae Myung has called for the full mobilization of personn

Another 59 people suffered serious or slight injuries. Firefighters have been searching for the four people who were unaccounted for when the blaze started. One of the bodies was found on the second floor of the factory and nine others were found on the third floor, according to authorities. Authorities said they began overnight search operations at around 10:50 p.m. on Friday after experts determined it was safe for firefighters to enter the building.

- Korea closes loophole on synthetic nicotine to curb youth vaping (2026-03-20 11:57)

South Korea will strictly regulate synthetic nicotine e-cigarettes under conventional tobacco laws starting next month, closing a long-standing loophole to combat a surge in youth vaping. The Ministry of Health and Welfare announced Thursday that the revised Tobacco Business Act takes effect April 24. The previous law defined tobacco based solely on tobacco-derived nicotine extracted from leaves, exempting synthetic nicotine products that carry virtually identical addictive properties. The revision brings synthetic nicotine under tobacco regulations. Authorities banned the use of these e-cigarettes in smoke-free zones, carrying fines of up to 100,000 won ($69) for violators. Sellers must register as authorized retailers, and the government banned online sales outright. Crackdown on youth marketing The law specifically targets marketing aimed at youths. Manufacturers must attach warning pictures and phrases to packaging. The government also banned flavor descriptors such as "mango," "mint" and "sweet"— alongside related images — on e-liquid bottles. The presidential office said Friday that construction will resume on the long-delayed Seoul-Yangpyeong Expressway, a 27-kilometer four-lane route linking Gamil-dong in Hanam with Yangpyeong, east of Seoul, at an estimated cost of 1.7 trillion won ($1.3 billion). The project was halted in July 2023 after allegations emerged that a proposed route change — shifting the expressway's endpoint from Yangseo-myeon to Gangsang-myeon, which are both in Yangpyeong — led to preferential treatment benefiting land linked to Kim Keon Hee, the wife of then-President Yoon Suk Yeol. Investigations later found that Kim's family and affiliated companies owned multiple parcels of land within roughly five kilometers of the proposed endpoint. Hong Ik-pyo, the presidential secretary for political affairs, said at a news conference that the decision to revive the project reflected a view that it could no longer be delayed. "The decision was driven by the judgment that the project could no longer be delayed, given worsening congestion in surrounding areas and the expected 2029 occupancy of Gyosan New T

The Seoul local government on Friday sent out a public safety alert in English for the first time as part of safety measures ahead of BTS' comeback concert this Saturday, which is expected to draw up to 260,000 people. The Seoul Metropolitan Government sent an English-language alert on traffic controls ahead of BTS' show at Gwanghwamun Square which read: "Mar 20 9PM~22 6AM Sejongdaero closed; Mar 21 4~11PM Sajikro, 7~11PM Saemunanro closed [SEOUL]," accompanied by a Korean version of the message. "If foreign attendees only receive alerts in Korean, that could pose a real safety risk in an emergency," an official from Seoul's disaster and safety office told The Korea Times. "We wanted to ensure they receive the same information as locals at the same time." The official added that the alert reached all phones in Seoul regardless of roaming status, though those moving outside the coverage area at the time of sending may have missed it. English alerts will continue Saturday, targeted at those in and around the Gwanghwamun area, with prepared scenario-based messages covering crowd di

President Lee Jae Myung on Friday instructed authorities to mobilize all available resources to rescue victims and contain a fire at a car parts plant in the central city of Daejeon, Cheong Wa Dae said. Lee gave the instruction after being briefed on the fire, which broke out at around 1:17 p.m. in Daejeon, injuring at least 50 people, including 35 seriously, so far. "Lee ordered authorities to mobilize all available resources, including equipment and personnel, to bring the situation under control and rescue people," presidential spokesperson Kang Yu-jung said in a press notice. "He called for the swift rescue of those affected while also stressing the need to prevent safety accidents involving rescue personnel." The National Fire Agency issued a nationwide firefighting mobilization order at 1:53 p.m., a measure taken when a blaze is considered to exceed the response capacity of local authorities.

President Lee Jae Myung on Friday hosted a luncheon for athletes who competed in the Milano-Cortina 2026 Winter Paralympic Games, praising their performance and unwavering spirit in overcoming challenges. Lee said the Korean athletes demonstrated remarkable resilience, adding that the public will long remember the inspiration they provided during this year's Winter Games. South Korea finished 13th with two gold medals, four silver medals and one bronze medal at the Milano-Cortina Paralympic Games, marking its best-ever result at a Winter Paralympics. "As athletes representing the Republic of Korea, you pushed beyond your limits and delivered deep inspiration and pride to the people and audiences around the world," Lee said during the luncheon at Cheong Wa Dae. "The government will actively support people with disabilities so they can build confidence and a sense of achievement through sports and lead healthy lives," he added. A fire broke out at a car parts plant in the central city of Daejeon on Friday, injuring at least 55 people, with 14 others unaccounted for, authorities said. The fire was reported at around 1:17 p.m., prompting the National Fire Agency to issue a national firefighting mobilization order, which is given when the scale of the fire is deemed to surpass the firefighting capacity of the local government. The Ministry of the Interior and Safety ordered the formation of a central disaster response headquarters to handle the accident in a more coordinated manner and prevent further damage. "The government will make the utmost effort to manage the situation, carry out recovery work and support the victims," Interior Minister Yun Ho-jung said. A total of 170 workers were inside the plant when the blaze started, and 14 of them have been unreachable, officials said. Of the injured, including 24 with serious injuries, many had inhaled toxic gas or fallen from the building, they said. More than 200 firefighters and 90 pieces of equipment have been deployed to the scene to put out the blaze, aided by he

The government has launched a nationwide inspection of trash bag stockpiles amid concerns that the U.S.-Israel war on Iran could lead to supply shortages. The Ministry of Climate, Energy and Environment said Friday that it had asked local governments across the country to conduct a preemptive review of trash bag inventories after manufacturers notified authorities that they had enough raw materials to last only about a month. Trash bags are made using linear low-density polyethylene, or LLDPE, and high-density polyethylene, or HDPE, both of which are derived from naphtha, a crude oil-based feedstock. Growing uncertainty over naphtha supply linked to disruptions at the Strait of Hormuz has pushed up prices for a range of petroleum-based products. A survey by the Korea Federation of Plastics Industry Cooperatives found that the supply price of polyethylene rose by 200,000 won ($133) in March alone. Some companies were also reportedly told that the supply price of LLDPE could rise by an additional 400,000 won to 800,000 won. Local governments are believed to have enough trash bags in reserv

- Why Koreans feel poorer even as official income data improves (2026-03-20 05:57)

Even as official data shows a narrowing income gap, Koreans say they feel the wealth gap is growing due to the heavy burden of groceries and housing costs. A report published Thursday by the Korea Institute for Health and Social Affairs, titled "Why do people feel inequality is severe?", highlighted this gap between official data and reality. The research noted that the country's Gini index — a key measure of income distribution where a lower number signifies less inequality — dropped from 0.418 in 2011 to 0.392 in 2023. The official index was compiled by the Ministry of Data and Statistics. Analyzing this data, the institute concluded that an expansion of government transfers, such as state pensions and various public benefits, has helped narrow the statistical wealth gap. However, public perceptions moved in the opposite direction during the same period. Perception vs. reality Lower-income households see the gap between themselves and higher earners as growing wider, even if their actual earnings increased. The institute attributed this directly to the cost of living. Because groce

- Trade ministry launches task force to respond to USTR probes (2026-03-20 05:57)

The Ministry of Trade, Industry and Resources launched Friday a joint task force with private industries to coordinate responses to the United States' trade investigations into South Korea over structural excess capacity and forced labor, officials said. Earlier this month, the office of the U.S. Trade Representative (USTR) launched consecutive trade inquiries into South Korea and other major economies to uncover what it calls "unfair" trade practices related to structural excess capacity and production, and separate probes involving forced labor under Section 301 of the 1974 Trade Act. The task force, led by the ministry, comprises officials from relevant authorities and private industries, as well as trade experts. It will respond to the trade inquiries and related procedures, such as submission of written opinions and public hearings. During Friday's trade strategy meeting, Trade Minister Yeo Han-koo said the USTR's move appears to be aimed at restoring trade-related measures Washington had imposed on partners before the U.S. Supreme Court struck down U.S. President Donald Trump's "r

Korea is ramping up efforts to secure Canada's submarine procurement project, with Defense Acquisition Program Administration (DAPA) Minister Lee Yong-cheol saying the outcome remains too close to call. "It is difficult to say at this point whether we will win or lose," Lee said during a press briefing Thursday. Still, he emphasized the strategic importance of the project, noting that a successful bid could significantly elevate Korea's position in the global defense market. "If we secure the deal, it could fundamentally change the landscape of Korea's defense industry," he said. Canada is seeking to replace its aging submarine fleet with up to 12 next-generation vessels under a project estimated at around 60 billion Canadian dollars ($43.7 billion). Korea and Germany have emerged as the leading contenders, with Berlin proposing an industrial package that combines submarine sales with automotive and battery investments, in line with Ottawa's push to attract broader manufacturing investment alongside defense contracts. The Canadian submarine program is widely regarded as a k

- Korea's rights body urges safer undocumented migrant crackdowns after Daegu death (2026-03-20 05:57)

The National Human Rights Commission of Korea urged authorities to take stronger safety measures when planning crackdowns on undocumented migrants, citing concerns over possible clashes during enforcement operations. The commission said Friday it recommended to Justice Minister Jung Sung-ho in January that enforcement plans include measures to block access to areas prone to falls or other accidents. It also called for immigration officer ID cards — currently worn on lanyards, which can be grabbed or snagged — to be redesigned in a form and material that better protects the physical safety of both officers and foreign nationals subject to enforcement. Authorities have faced repeated criticism over heavy-handed enforcement tactics. Last October, Tu Anh, a 25-year-old Vietnamese, was found dead after falling from a building while hiding from immigration officers during a crackdown at an industrial complex in Daegu. In a separate case in 2024, an unidentified complainant alleged that immigration officers raided a restaurant without presenting documents or identifying themselves to the o

Jeonju City has partnered with the local restaurant industry to promote regional food culture as a part of an effort to transform the city into a global tourism hub. The city said on Thursday it held a “multilingual menu support relay campaign” and a resolution event on hygiene and friendly service at the annual general meeting of the Wansan-gu branch of the Korean Federation of Restaurants at the Jeonbuk Regional Office of SMEs and Startups. During the meeting, restaurant owners announced a joint pledge to create clean and safe kitchen environments, provide friendly service and ensure reasonable prices in a bid to build a trustworthy dining environment for tourists. Centered around its Hanok Village, Jeonju attracts around 10 million visitors a year, with the number of foreign tourists also showing a gradual increase. In response to the growth, the city plans to launch a relay campaign to support multilingual menus and reduce language barriers for overseas visitors. The initiative will help restaurants create menus in English, Chinese — both simplified and traditional — and Japa

- Foreign visitors increase sharply ahead of BTS concert (2026-03-20 05:57)

The number of foreigners visiting South Korea this month increased by more than 30 percent from a year ago, data showed Friday, indicating a possible influx of global BTS fans ahead of the K-pop band's comeback concert in Seoul this weekend. According to the Korea Immigration Service, the number of foreigners, excluding crew members, who entered the country from March 1-18, was tallied at 1,099,700, marking an increase of 32.7 percent, or 271,200, from 828,500 in the same period of last year. The increase can probably be attributed to the gathering of BTS fans in time for Saturday's concert on Gwanghwamun Square in central Seoul. If those arriving here Thursday and Friday are taken into account, there are predictions that the number of foreign visitors could rise by more than 50 percent on-year. As if to prove the BTS effect, the increase is particularly noticeable among those in their teens and 20s, where the band's fan base is large. The number of foreign visitors in their teens and 20s rose by 40 percent and 35.2 percent, respectively, the data showed.

Rep. Jang Kyung-tae of the ruling Democratic Party of Korea (DPK), who is facing sexual harassment allegations, said Friday he will leave the party and seek to prove his innocence. Jang made the announcement a day after a police review panel recommended that his case be referred to prosecutors over allegations that he sexually harassed a female aide. "I will prove my innocence and return so as not to cause harm to the party," Jang wrote on his Facebook account. "Although there were controversies during the investigative process, I will faithfully cooperate and prove my innocence," he added. The two-term lawmaker is accused of sexually harassing the aide during a staff dinner at a restaurant in October 2023. Authorities also allege that he caused "secondary harm," including exposing the victim's identity.

Police commandos and barricades will be deployed across downtown Seoul this weekend as authorities brace for one of the largest-ever crowds for K-pop group BTS' comeback concert, officials said Friday. BTS is set to perform at Gwanghwamun Square on Saturday to mark its return after a four-year hiatus, with up to 260,000 people expected to fill the area stretching from the main stage to Sungnye Gate, over a kilometer away. It would mark one of the largest crowds in the area since the 2002 Korea-Japan World Cup, when around 200,000 to 250,000 people gathered to cheer for the home team. As fans and visitors are expected to flock from across the world, authorities are on high alert, with plans to deploy about 15,000 personnel for safety management, including some 6,700 police officers. Police plan to operate tactical teams to respond to drone threats, while triple-layer barricades will be installed around the concert site to ward off potential terror threats. Concertgoers will have to go through metal detectors, with police planning further checks with handheld detectors. Those without identi

- Defense ministry seeks to revise drone command's role rather than disband it (2026-03-19 11:57)

The defense ministry said Thursday it will push to reform the Drone Operations Command into a military unit tasked with overseeing drone policy and education instead of its abolishment. The move is seen as a compromise after a special advisory committee tasked with reforming the military called on the ministry in January to scrap the command as part of a wider organizational reform following former President Yoon Suk Yeol's botched martial law bid in late 2024. The ministry said it will seek to reform the command into one dedicated to advancing military drone concepts and policy as well as cooperation with the private sector amid efforts to strengthen the military's drone capabilities. It also plans to disperse the command's operational functions across different military branches. The drone command had been embroiled in allegations of sending drones over Pyongyang during Yoon's term in an apparent move to provoke the North and use it as a pretext for his short-lived imposition of martial law.

Jane, a 67-year-old American, flew to Seoul specifically for K-pop juggernaut BTS' concert this Saturday. As a longtime BTS fan, she attended Jin's solo concerts in Tampa and London, and J-Hope's in San Antonio — but has never seen all seven of them together on one stage. When BTS announced its return as a full group for the first time in nearly four years with a comeback concert set for central Seoul's iconic Gwanghwamun Square, she booked a flight. “This is my first BTS group concert,” she told The Korea Times at the square, Thursday, two days before the show. “BTS is paving the way. This is amazing what they're doing with the hallyu (Korean wave) — they've really taken it to the next level,” she added. The venue reflected the scale of what was coming — stage nearly complete, steel barriers extending well beyond the square into surrounding streets, crew members speaking a mix of languages rushing around with quiet urgency. Gwanghwamun Square, a space more often used for protests and public rallies, was now operating under unprecedented restrictions, with up to 260,0

Korea is on the verge of clinching its first export deal for the domestically developed KF-21 Boramae fighter jet, with Indonesian President Prabowo Subianto expected to visit the jet's manufacturer during a state visit later this month to sign a preliminary agreement, industry officials confirmed Thursday. “Indonesian President Prabowo Subianto will be visiting Korea to meet with Korean President Lee Jae Myung and have a ceremony for signing an agreement,” an industry official told The Korea Times, Thursday. “The two countries will be having a ceremonial event together.” Indonesia plans to purchase 16 fighter jets in the first order — down from the originally planned 48 — due to budget constraints, Asia Business Daily reported Thursday. Subianto is scheduled to visit Korea Aerospace Industries (KAI), the Sacheon, South Gyeongsang Province-based manufacturer of the jet, during his state visit from March 31 to April 2. The two sides aim to finalize an implementation contract in the first half of this year. The deal would mark a milestone for the KF-21 project that began in 20

North Korea is rapidly absorbing drone warfare tactics and combat experience through its participation in Russia's war against Ukraine, raising new security concerns for South Korea, experts said Thursday. They warned that the growing role of low-cost unmanned systems is reshaping modern warfare and could directly affect the security environment on the Korean Peninsula. The remarks were made at a seminar hosted by Rep. Yu Yong-weon of the People Power Party at the National Assembly in Seoul. The event brought together Ukrainian and South Korean security experts to assess how recent conflicts are transforming the nature of warfare. Yu said the global security environment is undergoing what he described as a fundamental shift, with unmanned systems emerging as a central driver of change on the battlefield. He pointed to cases in which relatively inexpensive drones are used to destroy high-value targets, noting that such developments are challenging long-standing assumptions about military power and deterrence. “The rules of warfare are being rewritten,” Yu said, emphasizing that the gap

The presidential Economic, Social and Labor Council has placed artificial intelligence (AI) at the center of its new work agenda, establishing a dedicated AI transition committee as part of a broader effort to revitalize tripartite social dialogue. The council under President Lee Jae Myung held its first plenary session Thursday at Cheong Wa Dae, unveiling a package of seven committees that collectively target what officials call Korea's “compound transition crisis” of an AI revolution, demographic change and the green energy transition. Its committee on “labor-management coexistence in the AI transition” seeks to map how AI spreads through workplaces, how jobs and skills will change, and what cooperation models labor and management can build around that shift. Council Chair Kim Ji-hyung said AI has become one of the most pressing challenges for the nation's economy and labor market and therefore needs to be handled as a dedicated social dialogue agenda, amid fears of job replacement as companies such as Hyundai Motor move to introduce humanoid robots like “Atlas.” Speak

The number of marriages in Korea climbed to a seven-year high in 2025, rebounding to prepandemic levels, according to the Ministry of Data and Statistics, Thursday. Experts point to a growing population of people in their early 30s and a gradual shift in young people's attitudes toward marriage as key drivers behind the rise. A total of 240,300 couples tied the knot last year, up 8.1 percent from a year earlier. The figure had been in steady decline from 2018 to 2022, plunging from 257,600 to an all-time low of 191,700. It began to recover in 2023, marking a third straight year of gains in 2025. The average age at first marriage stood at 33.9 for men and 31.6 for women. Meanwhile, divorces fell 3.3 percent year-on-year to 88,000. "The increase in marriages can largely be explained by the so-called 'echo boom generation' — those born between 1991 and 1996 during a temporary rise in births — reaching prime marrying age," said Hong Sok-chul, an economics professor at Seoul National University. "With a larger population in their early 30s, the total number of marriages natura

The ruling Democratic Party Korea (DPK) on Thursday introduced a prosecution reform bill aimed at separating investigative and indictment powers at a parliamentary plenary session, prompting the main opposition party to launch a filibuster. In what would be a major overhaul of the prosecution service, the bills are follow-up measures to a government reorganization law that will abolish the existing prosecution service structure in October and outline the framework for launching new investigative and indictment agencies in the same month. During the plenary session, the main opposition People Power Party launched a filibuster in protest, after the DPK brought the bill to establish an indictment agency to the floor. Under the bill, the indictment agency will only handle indictments, while a separate body, the so-called serious crimes investigation agency, will have powers to open investigations into crimes involving corruption and economic offenses, among others. No change was made to the title of the agency's chief, which will remain "prosecutor general." The government has pushed for the Police on Thursday disclosed the photo and personal information of a suspect in a high-profile stalking murder case in Namyangju, 20 kilometers east of Seoul. The driver's license photo of Kim Hoon, 44, who was arrested for stalking and killing his ex-girlfriend last Saturday while wearing an electronic ankle monitor, was made public by the Gyeonggi Bukbu Provincial Police Agency. The police said the suspect's identity disclosure was made in consideration of the brutality of his crime, sufficient evidence to prove the crime, the severity of the damage and public interests. The police said they released Kim's driver's license photo with his consent considering that he is now receiving treatment at a hospital. Kim allegedly broke the windows of a car his former live-in partner was riding in, killed her and fled in his own car. He was hospitalized for taking an undisclosed type of drug at the time of his apprehension. The case has sparked criticism that the authorities failed to protect the 20-something victim even though she was wearing a smartwatch as a subject of police protection and th

The government has been criticized for insufficient policies for aluminum can recycling, as the number of Koreans choosing aluminum cans as their most preferred beverage packaging material rose from a year earlier, signaling a growing preference for more recyclable materials. The Seoul Korea Federation for Environmental Movements (KFEM) released the findings Thursday, after a survey of 1,011 adults nationwide on the occasion of Global Recycling Day, marked annually on March 18. The latest poll followed a previous one conducted in February 2025. When asked about their most preferred beverage packaging material, 34.7 percent of respondents chose aluminum cans, up 10.8 percentage points from the previous year. Plastic bottles remained the top choice at 43.4 percent, but the results were interpreted as a sign of shifting consumer sentiment toward more recyclable packaging. Nearly 8 in 10 respondents agreed that recycling materials without losing their original properties is important to mitigate the climate crisis. Even so, only about half were aware that aluminum cans can be infinitely recyc

The government and Korea's retail industry agreed Wednesday to remove charcoal briquettes from open store displays in a move aimed at preventing suicide attempts. The measure comes as nearly one in four suicide deaths in the country involve charcoal briquettes. The Office for Government Policy Coordination said its Suicide Prevention Policy Office signed a memorandum of understanding with five retail industry groups at the Government Complex Seoul. The signatories included associations representing chain stores, convenience stores, supermarkets, online shopping platforms and campgrounds. Under the agreement, retailers will no longer keep charcoal briquettes on store shelves and will instead provide them only upon customer request. Product packaging will also carry stickers displaying the suicide prevention hotline number, 109. According to the office, 3,525 people died in 2024 from carbon monoxide poisoning involving charcoal briquettes, accounting for 23.7 percent of all suicide deaths that year. The government said the figure underscored the need to better manage access to the common

- Number of marriages in Korea rises 8.1% to 7-year high in 2025 (2026-03-19 05:57)

The number of marriages in Korea increased 8.1 percent from a year earlier in 2025 to post the highest figure in seven years, government data showed Thursday. A total of 240,300 marriages were reported last year, up from 222,400 cases in 2024 and marking the third consecutive year of increase, according to the Ministry of Data and Statistics. The 2025 tally was similar to the pre-pandemic level of 239,200 cases posted in 2019. The number of marriages hovered around the 200,000 threshold from 2020-2023, as many couples postponed the event during the pandemic, before the tally rebounded to 222,000 in 2024. The ministry attributed the recent rise in marriages to an increase in population in their early 30s and the concentration of marriages that had been delayed during the pandemic. Positive perception toward marriage has also been increasing among singles, it added. The average age of first marriage for men came to 33.9 in 2025, while the corresponding figure for women stood at 31.6. Ten years ago, men got married at an average age of 32.6 and women did so at 30. The number of divorces decreased

- Lee emphasizes worker acceptance in labor flexibility push (2026-03-19 05:57)

President Lee Jae Myung said Thursday importance should be attached to the likelihood of workers' acceptance in adopting labor market flexibility, expressing objection to unilateral sacrifices by laborers when companies adjust workplace policies. Lee made the remarks during a debate session with the Economic, Social and Labor Council, a tripartite presidential advisory body, alongside labor groups and government officials. "We need to create conditions in which workers can accept the kind of employment flexibility that companies seek. It cannot be forced, as that would be unfair," Lee said during the session at Cheong Wa Dae. He emphasized the importance of reinforcing the social safety net to support workers amid a changing job market, calling on companies that benefit from increased labor flexibility to shoulder a greater share of the burden. "It is not right to proceed in a way that demands unilateral sacrifice from workers. We need to create a rational environment that everyone can accept," he said. "Building a sufficient social safety net is essential so that workers do not feel ins

A stretch of suburban roads southwest of Seoul is being turned into a real-world laboratory for self-driving technology, as the government moves to push autonomous vehicles out of test tracks and into everyday life. The Ministry of Land, Infrastructure and Transport said it will open an "AI (artificial intelligence) autonomous driving hub" Friday in Hwaseong, Gyeonggi Province, where self-driving services will be tested not just for transportation but also for a range of city management tasks. The project is part of a broader government initiative to accelerate future mobility and build so-called "K-AI cities," integrating AI into urban infrastructure. The testing zone spans 36.13 square kilometers in western Hwaseong with a total road network of 46.5 kilometers. Within the area, autonomous systems will be deployed to support mobility for vulnerable groups, carry out street cleaning, monitor road conditions and even transport emergency patients. The ministry said the hub will serve as a control center built on an intelligent transportation system, designed to address the limitations

- Ruling party, gov't agree on support measures for SMEs hit by rising oil prices (2026-03-19 05:57)

The ruling Democratic Party of Korea (DPK) and the government agreed Thursday on the need to provide support for small and medium-sized enterprises (SMEs) and micro business owners to cushion them from rising oil prices due to an intensifying war in the Middle East. The meeting, attended by DPK lawmakers and Financial Services Commission (FSC) officials, came as the government is preparing a supplementary budget to address the fallout from the ongoing conflict. The two sides also discussed plans to provide financial support to the state-run Industrial Bank of Korea (IBK), one of the key policy lenders in Korea, to help lower borrowing costs for SMEs and mom-and-pop stores, DPK Rep. Kim Nam-geun said during a briefing. At the meeting, FSC Chairman Lee Eog-weon said the government will seek to include in the supplementary budget programs aimed at easing the burden on companies and small merchants hit by the Middle East crisis. The DPK and the government earlier agreed to draw up and submit this year's first supplementary budget bill to the National Assembly by the end of this month.

- US Army stationed in Korea conducts long-range aviation combat drills (2026-03-19 05:57)

A U.S. Army unit stationed in South Korea said Thursday it has conducted large-scale aviation drills aimed at demonstrating its aviation combat capability. Soldiers from the 2nd Combat Aviation Brigade of the 2nd Infantry Division participated in the Talon Reach exercise, which ran from March 9-12, according to a release by the brigade. It involved AH-64 Apache attack helicopter, UH-60 Black Hawk and CH-47 Chinook aircraft, alongside sustainment elements and small unmanned aircraft systems, it said. The brigade's aviation regiment in charge of operating small unmanned aircraft systems supported reconnaissance and targeting missions across the battlespace. Following an extensive aviation mission stretching over 1,300 miles, or 2,092 kilometers, the Apache crews engaged in a precision fires mission against simulated enemy targets, wrapping up the exercise in an attack and seizure of an island. "Exercises like Talon Reach demonstrate the strength of the U.S.-ROK alliance and the commitment of both nations to maintaining a ready and capable combined force," it said, referring to South Korea b

A social media post showing a cafe charging 2,000 won ($1.35) for restroom use without a purchase has sparked heated debate online in South Korea. The image featured a screenshot of a self-order kiosk displaying a menu item reading "restroom use without ordering," priced at 2,000 won per person, per visit. The post also drew mixed reactions in an online community for small-business owners. One user said the fee was understandable, writing that many people come in just to use the restroom without buying anything and sometimes leave it in a filthy condition. From a cafe owner's perspective, the commenter said, such behavior can seem brazenly inconsiderate. Others were less sympathetic. Another commenter called the fee excessive and said it came off as "cold-hearted." One cafe owner also shared the challenges of managing restrooms at a business located in an area popular with tourists. "It is a big burden because people often throw away regular trash or even leave full garbage bags in the restroom," the owner wrote. The owner said a password system was added to the restroom door

- Investigators question ex-oceans minister in Unification Church-linked bribery case (2026-03-19 05:57)

A former oceans minister, who is a ruling Democratic Party of Korea (DPK) lawmaker, appeared before investigators Thursday to be questioned about bribery allegations linked to the Unification Church. Rep. Chun Jae-soo is suspected of violating laws on bribery and political funds for allegedly receiving 20 million won ($13,300) in cash and a luxury watch worth 10 million won from the church in 2018. The gifts are suspected to have been given to win Chun's support for church projects, including the construction of a proposed undersea tunnel connecting Korea and Japan. "I hope a conclusion is made as soon as possible," Chun told reporters as he arrived at a joint police-prosecutor team's office in southern Seoul. He did not answer their questions about the alleged gifts and favors. The joint investigation launched in January after a former Unification Church official claimed that he gave cash and other gifts on behalf of the church to current and former lawmakers, including Chun, between 2018 and 2020. Chun stepped down as oceans minister late last year shortly after the bribery allegations

- S. Korea, US conclude key springtime military drills amid N. Korean threats (2026-03-19 05:57)

South Korea and the United States wrapped up their annual Freedom Shield (FS) exercise Thursday aimed at strengthening their combined readiness posture, amid North Korea's verbal threats and the launch of some 10 ballistic missiles. The major springtime exercise, involving realistic wartime scenarios reflecting trends in modern warfare, drew to an end after an 11-day run, their militaries said in a joint statement. "The Republic of Korea and the United States successfully concluded FS 26, reaffirming a strong combined defense posture and further enhancing the alliance's ability to conduct operations across all domains," the statement said, referring to South Korea by its formal name. This year's exercise focused on assessing conditions to achieve the transfer of wartime operational control (OPCON) from Washington to Seoul as South Korea seeks a "conditions-based" handover within President Lee Jae Myung's five-year term ending in 2030. Some 18,000 troops took part in the drills, a scale similar to the previous year, but the number of field training exercises halved to around 22, compared

The science and education ministries discussed Thursday ways to foster artificial intelligence (AI) talent amid fast changes in the rapidly evolving sector, officials said. The Ministry of Science and ICT held a meeting with the Ministry of Education to seek joint efforts to provide AI education programs across all stages of schooling, including establishing education platforms in which students can engage directly with data and AI models. Korea will also provide training courses for teachers and prepare guidelines on the safe use of AI platforms. The government will promote cooperation among AI-related departments at local universities, including joint research and exchange programs. "Now is the golden time to implement policy measures to foster professionals amid a major transformation, under which the development of cutting-edge technologies is accelerating and the global industrial order is being reshaped by AI," Science Minister Bae Kyung-hoon said in a release.

- Ruling party set to push prosecution reform bills at plenary session (2026-03-19 05:57)

The ruling Democratic Party of Korea (DPK) on Thursday was poised to push for the passage of key prosecution reform bills aimed at separating investigative and indictment powers, despite protest from the main opposition party. In what would be a major overhaul of the prosecution service, the bills are follow-up measures to a government reorganization law that will abolish the existing prosecution service structure in October and outline the framework for launching new investigative and indictment agencies in the same month. In protest, the main opposition People Power Party is expected to launch a filibuster if the DPK brings the bills to establish a serious crimes investigation agency and an indictment agency to the floor during a plenary session later in the day. The DPK, which holds a majority in the Assembly, is also expected to push for a parliamentary investigation into allegations of what it calls fabricated indictments under the Yoon Suk Yeol administration, covering the 2015 Daejang-dong development project in Seongnam when President Lee Jae Myung was the city's mayor, as well

- Warehouse-style drugstores in Korea fuel rise in teen overdoses (2026-03-18 11:57)

Lee, a 15-year-old middle school student in Ulsan, boarded a bus for an hour-long trip not to meet friends or shop for clothes, but to buy sleep aids. At a warehouse drugstore, she said, no one asked why she was buying pills, or how many. Warehouse drugstores in Korea are enabling a growing teenage overdose problem by removing face-to-face medical oversight from over-the-counter drug sales, a retail model regulators have yet to meaningfully address. Teenagers refer to the practice as “OD,” short for overdose — taking excessive amounts of over-the-counter drugs to cause hallucinations. Health officials say the trend has spread rapidly, fueled by easy access to medication and social media posts that help spread the trend. At the center of the issue is the warehouse drugstore model, where customers select over-the-counter medications directly from open shelves with minimal pharmacist consultation. The format contrasts with neighborhood pharmacies, where pharmacists typically screen purchases and question minors about their symptoms. “Local pharmacies either ref

Nam Dong-deuk, 42, a 15-year veteran at his company, sat at his desk and turned on his computer. As his fingers moved across the keyboard and his eyes darted between the monitors, he looked as if he were casually chatting with a colleague. Ninety minutes later, he leaned back with a relaxed smile, like a student relieved to have finished his homework. In that time, he had created an artificial intelligence (AI) chatbot that could answer coworkers’ questions on the company’s internal messenger, from how to use vacation days to how to spend company reward points, using information drawn from internal manuals. Nam is not a seasoned developer fluent in code. A business administration major who has worked at both large corporations and startups, he is now an HR manager at an online commerce platform. The reason he was able to build the chatbot in under two hours, he said, was “vibe coding.” Nam described vibe coding as a way to create software simply by telling AI what function is needed, instead of learning complex programming languages. Employees in each department can build the pro

- 1 in 3 young Koreans who leave Seoul return within 2 years, report finds (2026-03-18 11:57)

About 1 in 3 young Koreans who move to regions outside the capital return to the Seoul metropolitan area in less than two years, underscoring the persistent struggle of regional cities to hold onto young residents. According to a report by the Korea Institute for Industrial Economics & Trade, released Wednesday, 34.9 percent of young people who moved away from the Seoul metropolitan area to regions outside the capital eventually returned, with an average stay outside the capital region of just 1.6 years. Of all young people who migrated between the two regions, 42.7 percent moved from non-capital areas to the Seoul metropolitan area and settled there — the highest share of any migration pattern. By contrast, only 21.3 percent made the reverse move and remained outside the capital region. The findings are based on data tracking the migration of about 1.45 million individuals aged 19 to 34 from 2016 to 2022. Economic opportunity was the primary pull factor. In a separate survey of 800 respondents last year, work or business ranked as the top reason for leaving their home regions, at 45 p

- Defense chief inspects Freedom Shield drills at military bunker (2026-03-18 11:57)

Defense Minister Ahn Gyu-back on Wednesday visited an underground bunker of the Capital Defense Command to inspect military readiness amid ongoing key springtime drills between the South Korean and U.S. militaries, his office said. Ahn urged troops to maintain a robust joint defense posture through "intensive" and "practical" training during his visit to the basement bunker on the 10th day of the 11-day Freedom Shield (FS) exercise, the defense ministry said. Citing the escalating conflict in the Middle East following U.S.-Israeli strikes on Iran last month, Ahn underscored the importance of "high-intensity" military training, saying the intensity of training directly translates into "combat capabilities." Ahn also visited a joint air defense operations center, where he urged troops to make the utmost efforts to carry out the exercise's remaining field drills, which will continue into next week after FS concludes Thursday. This year's FS drills were centered on preparing for a conditions-based wartime operational control (OPCON) transfer from Washington to Seoul. The current Lee Jae Myun

- Police to set up crowd control zone for 100,000 people during BTS concert (2026-03-18 11:57)

Police said Wednesday they will set up a crowd control zone with a capacity of 100,000 people around the stage where K-pop group BTS will perform in central Seoul this weekend. The zone will be set up so that no more than one person occupies every square meter, as safety is of paramount importance during the concert set to begin at 8 p.m. Saturday at Gwanghwamun Square, an official at the Seoul Metropolitan Police told reporters. Police expect around 260,000 people to gather in the area stretching from the square to Sungnye Gate, the largest number since the 2002 World Cup, when up to 250,000 people cheered in the streets. Random checkpoints will be conducted on the day, with 72 teams of riot police and 35 teams of detectives deployed to the area. Audience members entering the crowd control zone will be required to walk through metal detectors and undergo searches for hazardous materials. "We decided to create the safest conditions possible given the nature of the event that can be attended by anyone in an open downtown area, and memories of the Itaewon tragedy," the official said, referring

- Korea's Hormuz deployment, if decided, could take up to 3 months (2026-03-18 11:57)

The potential deployment of Korean naval forces to the Strait of Hormuz could stretch into a monthslong operation, with mine-clearing missions alone potentially taking three months or more, depending on conditions, military officials said. While some have raised the possibility of redirecting the Cheonghae Unit — currently operating in the Gulf of Aden — to the Hormuz mission, the unit is not equipped with mine-sweeping helicopters needed for such operations. Deploying a dedicated mine countermeasure vessel or an Aegis destroyer from a Korean port would be an entirely separate undertaking. Officials familiar with the matter said that even if a decision is made, the timeline would be shaped not only by preparation and transit, but also by the complexity of operations in a high-risk environment. "One thing is sending a vessel, but once you factor in mine-clearing operations in the area, the situation becomes far more complicated," a defense ministry official said. Another official noted that mine countermeasure operations are highly sensitive to environmental conditions. "Sea cond

- Korea launches public-private committee to set up US investment management agency (2026-03-18 11:57)

The government on Wednesday launched a committee tasked with establishing a state agency to manage investment projects in the United States under a bilateral strategic investment agreement, the finance ministry said. As a follow-up to a special bill tied to Seoul's $350 billion investment pledge to Washington, the government plans to establish a public corporation responsible for the creation, management and operation of the investment fund. The establishment committee, chaired by First Vice Finance Minister Lee Hyung-il, consists of seven members, including four from the private sector, the Ministry of Finance and Economy said. The initiative comes as the special law is set to take effect three months after its promulgation. The National Assembly passed the bill last week. Lee said the committee will ensure that all necessary preparations and procedures are carried out without disruption so the agency can be launched in line with the law's implementation on June 18.

President Lee Jae Myung hosted a meeting on capital market reforms, Wednesday, arguing that geopolitical fears stemming from the divided Korean Peninsula are exaggerated and have long suppressed the value of Seoul stocks, suggesting that fixing the problem could turn the chronic "Korea discount" into a "Korea premium." "The geopolitical risk arising from the division of the Korean Peninsula is more exaggerated than people think and even politically exploited, becoming a recurring problem,” the president said during the meeting at Cheong Wa Dae, held under the slogan “A capital market strong in crisis and trusted by the people.” While acknowledging that risks must be addressed, Lee sought to reassure markets by noting that South Korea's spending exceeds North Korea's by more than 1.4 times and that its economic power — the foundation of national defense — is “overwhelmingly ahead, to the point where it's hard to compare.” “I believe that, depending on what we do, the country doesn't have to suffer from the ‘Korea discount.’ It is entirely possible to move beyond fair

The United Arab Emirates (UAE) has pledged to treat Korea as its top priority for crude oil exports, President Lee Jae Myung's top aide said Wednesday, announcing that a total of 24 million barrels have been secured from the Gulf country as Tehran's blockade of the Strait of Hormuz threatens to squeeze Seoul's energy supply. “The UAE promised that Korea is the ‘No. 1 priority’ in supplying crude oil and we agreed that Korea could buy oil anytime through the UAE,” presidential chief of staff Kang Hoon-sik said at a briefing. In addition to 6 million barrels of crude oil under a previous agreement, the UAE promised this time that an additional 18 million barrels would be shipped to Korea. Roughly 6 million barrels will be shipped by three UAE cargo ships, while six Korean vessels will transport the remainder. Kang added that Seoul and Abu Dhabi plan to sign a memorandum of understanding on the oil supply chain in the near future. The announcement follows a rapid diplomatic push by Kang, who flew to the UAE Sunday for a four-day trip, serving as Lee's special envoy for strategic economic c

- Korea moves to raise minimum salary for foreign workers to protect Korean wages (2026-03-18 11:57)

Korea is moving to introduce what would function as a higher minimum wage floor for many foreign workers, by writing “reasonable” wage requirements for migrants directly into visa and stay conditions. Responding to inquiries from The Korea Times about this new immigration policy, revealed earlier this month, the Ministry of Justice said the goal is to protect the wage levels of Koreans by pushing up wage levels for foreign workers in certain visa categories. “The purpose of setting wage requirements for foreign workers, as in countries such as the United States and Britain, is to prevent declines in Korean workers’ wages and guard against violations of their working conditions,” a ministry official said in a recent statement. Under the 2030 Immigration Policy Future Strategy, the ministry plans to embed these wage thresholds in immigration rules, so that employers will have to meet or exceed them if they want to hire or keep foreign workers on visas such as E-7-1 or E-7-3. This comes after President Lee Jae Myung publicly questioned whether a growth model built on low paid mi

- BTS' world tour projected to unleash economic boom surpassing Taylor Swift's impact (2026-03-18 11:57)

K-pop supergroup BTS is returning from a nearly four-year hiatus with an 82-show world tour that analysts project will generate massive economic activity, establishing an economic engine expected to surpass the financial impact of Taylor Swift's recent global tour. The Korea Culture and Tourism Institute estimates the upcoming 34-city tour will yield 1.2 trillion won ($840 million) per show. The Guardian reported that economists anticipate the North American leg alone will generate tens of trillions of won, significantly exceeding Taylor Swift's 60-date North American tour, which generated about 7 trillion won. Global media outlets are actively reporting on the comeback. The New York Times covered Korean fans rushing to internet cafes for tickets, while CNN broadcast its crew's attempts to book seats. "BTS is not just a regular K-pop group. They are really the engine of the industry itself," Berklee College of Music professor Ray Seol told CNN. The local economy is already feeling the "BTSnomics" effect ahead of Friday's release of the group's fifth studio album, "Arirang." Five-star ho

A team from the International Law School at Handong University won the 24th Red Cross International Humanitarian Law Moot Competition Saturday in Hong Kong — the first time a Korean team has taken the top prize since the competition began in 2003. The competition, jointly organized by the International Committee of the Red Cross and national Red Cross societies, is widely regarded as the region's leading moot court in international humanitarian law. It brings together regional champions and invited law schools to argue complex legal questions drawn from simulated armed conflict scenarios. This year's problem addressed contemporary issues in international humanitarian law, including the use of starvation as a method of warfare, forced conscription and the civilian toll of nuclear weapons. Participants were required to analyze and argue cases in English, applying the Geneva Conventions, customary international law, rules of engagement and principles of international criminal responsibility in written briefs and oral arguments modeled on proceedings before international courts. - Kookmin Univ. study maps gap between AI hype and bureaucratic reality (2026-03-18 05:57)

As governments around the world move to integrate generative artificial intelligence (AI) into the machinery of public decision-making, a new study suggests that confidence in the technology may be lagging behind its promise. A research team led by professor Kim Do-hyung of Kookmin University proposed a framework to measure what it describes as a critical disconnect: the gap between the actual maturity of AI systems and the expectations placed on them by stakeholders. The study, published in the peer-reviewed journal Technovation, argues that this divide could help determine whether the technology advances or falters in high-stakes public research and development programs. Seeking a more systematic approach, Kim and his co-authors devised what they call the "Maturity-Expectation Gap," or MEG, framework. The model draws on survey responses from experienced evaluators and pairs them with a machine learning analysis of academic research, aiming to measure both how ready the technology is and how much is expected of it. Their findings point to a notable divergence. Different groups—

Korea has signed a letter of intent with six U.N. agencies outlining their willingness to cooperate for the launch of a global hub for artificial intelligence (AI) in the country, the prime minister's office said Wednesday. The document was signed in Geneva, Switzerland, on Tuesday (local time), by officials from the science ministry on the South Korean side and the International Labor Organization (ILO), the International Organization for Migration (IOM), the International Telecommunication Union, the World Health Organization (WHO), the World Food Program and the United Nations Development Program on the U.N. side, the office said in a press release. The signing ceremony was attended by Prime Minister Kim Min-seok, who has been on a two-nation tour of the United States and Switzerland to promote South Korea's bid to host the AI hub. The government has billed the hub as a platform bringing together U.N. bodies, and South Korea's private and public sectors to produce AI-based solutions to global issues. Following meetings with U.N. Secretary-General Antonio Guterres and other agency chief

Medical Korea 2026 will open Thursday for a four-day run at Coex in Gangnam District, Seoul, featuring artificial intelligence (AI)-focused programs connecting Korea and the global health care industry. Hosted by the Ministry of Health and Welfare, the event has served since 2010 as a platform for global health care experts to share industry insights and promote international cooperation. Under the theme “AI-Powered Global Healthcare: Bringing the Future and the World Closer,” this year’s event will examine key challenges and the future of the health care industry in the era of AI. Edward Marx, chief executive officer of health care consulting firm Marx Advisory, will deliver a keynote address on how AI is reshaping the global health care industry. Jung Eun-young, director general of the Health Industry Policy Bureau at the health ministry, will outline Korea’s global medical services and future policy directions. Business meetings will connect overseas buyers seeking partnerships with Korean medical institutions and companies. Last year, 667 meetings led to 45 memorandums of un

Korea will raise the terror alert level in parts of central Seoul ahead of BTS’ free comeback concert at Gwanghwamun Square this Saturday, where more than 260,000 people are expected to gather. The prime minister's office announced Wednesday that the alert level will be elevated from the lowest “attention” to second-tier “caution,” out of a four-tier scale, in Jongno District and Jung District in central Seoul from the beginning of Thursday to midnight on Saturday as part of a preemptive move to prevent potential terror attacks. “Given the uncertainties driven by international affairs, the government concluded that it is hard to rule out the possibility of a potential terror threat to the event like BTS concert where a large crowd would flock and will take a preemptive move to ensure the people's safety as a priority," the office said in a press release. This comes amid rising tensions caused by the U.S-Israel war on Iran and the influx of tourists coming to Seoul for the historic concert event. The alert is issued when there is a possibility of a terrorist attack and an

- Police nab suspect behind airline pilot murder in Busan (2026-03-18 05:57)

Police have apprehended a man on suspicion of fatally stabbing an airline pilot in Busan, officials said Wednesday. The man in his 50s, surnamed Kim, was taken into custody Tuesday evening after allegedly murdering the victim, a former colleague, early that morning at an apartment in Busan, about 330 kilometers southeast of Seoul. The suspect, who has been identified as a former airline pilot, has said he began planning the crime three years earlier and sought to kill four people, according to police. Shortly after the murder, Kim visited another former colleague's home in Changwon, about 300 kilometers southeast of Seoul, to allegedly carry out another attack but the attempt failed. He is also accused of attempting to strangle and kill another former pilot colleague on Monday in Goyang, northwest of Seoul, before fleeing the scene. The suspect is said to have fallen out with his former colleagues when he lost his job two years earlier.

Actor Lee Jae-ryong, who was booked for causing a drunk driving accident and fleeing the scene in southern Seoul about two weeks ago, was referred to the prosecution without detention Wednesday. The Seoul Gangnam Police Station said it sent Lee's case to the Seoul Central District Prosecutors Office on charges of drunk driving, failure to take necessary actions after an accident and obstruction of a breathalyzer test. The 62-year-old actor is accused of crashing his car into the median barrier near Cheongdam Station in southern Seoul around 11 p.m. on March 6 and fleeing the scene. Immediately after the accident, he attended another drinking gathering and was apprehended by police at an acquaintance's house about three hours later. He initially denied drunk driving but later admitted to drinking four glasses of soju before the accident.

- Korea adds 234,000 jobs in February; youth unemployment hits 5-year high (2026-03-18 05:57)

Korea added 234,000 jobs in February, marking the fastest on-year growth in five months, though a slump in youth employment and the construction sector persisted, data showed Wednesday. The number of employed people rose by 0.8 percent from a year earlier to 28.41 million last month, according to the data from the Ministry of Data and Statistics. After slowing for two consecutive months, job growth rebounded to the 200,000 range in February, following gains of 225,000 in November, 168,000 in December and 108,000 in January. It also marks the largest on-year gain since adding 312,000 jobs in September 2024. Despite the overall rise, the data underscored a prolonged downturn in the manufacturing and construction sectors. Youth employment declined for the 22nd consecutive month in February, highlighting ongoing challenges for young job seekers. By age, the number of employed people aged 15 to 29 fell by 146,000 in February, the ministry said. The unemployment rate for the age group came to 7.7 percent, the highest level for any February since 2021, when it stood at 10.1 percent. In contrast, e

- Gov't to raise terror alert by 1 notch ahead of BTS concert (2026-03-17 23:57)

The government said Wednesday it will raise the official terror alert by one notch ahead of K-pop group BTS' comeback show in central Seoul this weekend. The alert will be raised to the second-lowest level of "caution" on a four-tier scale for the Jongno and Jung wards from midnight Wednesday until midnight Saturday, the Office for Government Policy Coordination said in a press release. BTS' concert is scheduled to take place at Gwanghwamun Square in Jongno on Saturday, drawing an expected hundreds of thousands of fans and visitors from around the world. The alert level was adjusted following Prime Minister Kim Min-seok's orders to draw up appropriate safety measures and as terror threats could not be ruled out in the wake of recent global security conditions, the government said. Relevant agencies plan to step up patrols at key sites and facilities and strengthen joint response systems in preparation for emergencies.

The number of employed people rose by 0.8 percent from a year earlier to 28.41 million last month, according to the data from the Ministry of Data and Statistics. It marks the largest year-on-year gain since adding 312,000 jobs in September 2024. Despite the overall rise, the data underscored a prolonged downturn in the manufacturing and construction sectors. Youth employment declined for the 22nd consecutive month in February, highlighting ongoing challenges for young job seekers.

- Pentagon official calls US 'flexibility' to meet urgent needs a 'strength' amid THAAD redeployment concerns (2026-03-17 23:57)

WASHINGTON — A senior Pentagon official said Tuesday "flexibility" in redeploying military assets to meet urgent needs across the world is a "tremendous" strength of a U.S. defense system, while commenting on concerns about the reported movement of a South Korea-based missile defense asset to the Middle East. Michael Duffey, undersecretary of defense for acquisition and sustainment, made the remarks during a House Foreign Affairs Committee hearing, after The Washington Post reported last week that the Pentagon was moving parts of a Terminal High Altitude Area Defense (THAAD) system to the Middle East amid the war with Iran. "I think our flexibility and our ability to redeploy assets to ensure that they meet the most poignant and urgent need across the globe is a tremendous strength of our system," he said. Duffey was responding to a question from Rep. Ami Bera (D-CA) about how long the U.S. plans to redeploy the THAAD asset to the Middle East. The official said that he cannot speak to the duration of any particular redeployment of a military asset. But he reiterated the United States' c

- BTS returns, merchants near comeback show venue brace for boom — or just another day (2026-03-17 23:57)

When Moon Sang-ki, 50, manager of JH Texas Bar next to Cheonggye Stream in central Seoul, heard that BTS would perform just around the corner from his bar as a full group for the first time in nearly four years, he knew he had to do something. “Both my staff and I are ARMY (BTS’ fandom). When we heard BTS would perform just outside our restaurant, we decided to turn the bar into a gathering spot for fans from around the world,” Moon told The Korea Times in an interview Monday. “We usually close at 1 a.m., but that day we will stay open for 24 hours and play BTS songs.” Decorating his bar with a BTS theme, Moon will run the restaurant with a full staff on March 21, the day of the concert, with 10 staff members providing hall service and four in the kitchen, all wearing purple — the color associated with the group. “We are receiving reservations from ARMY around the world, including China, Indonesia, Japan and the United States,” Moon said. “Foreigners usually make up about one-third of our customers, but since decorating the place like this, the share has risen to about

- Seoul capsule hotel blaze exposes fire safety blind spots ahead of BTS show (2026-03-17 11:57)

A Saturday fire that injured 10 people at a Seoul capsule hotel has exposed a critical weakness in Korea's fire safety laws, revealing how regulatory gaps leave hundreds of foreign tourists in sleeping pods vulnerable to fire — a hidden crisis that has prompted citywide emergency inspections ahead of an upcoming BTS concert. With safety concerns mounting ahead of the K-pop group's comeback performance on Saturday, the Seoul Metropolitan Government announced it will conduct emergency safety inspections of 5,481 accommodation facilities by Thursday. The targeted sweep includes 4,904 urban bed-and-breakfasts, 381 traditional hanok guesthouses and 151 lodging facilities in the Jongno and Jung districts. The recent blaze at the Sogong-dong facility underscored the extreme danger of the city's self-registration system. The hotel operated on the third and sixth floors of a seven-story building, registering only seven rooms with the government. However, reservations for the day of the fire reached 124 people — 65 on the third floor and 59 on the sixth floor. Capsule hotels surged in Seoul f

- Defense ministry to publish white paper for 1st time in 4 years (2026-03-17 11:57)

The defense ministry is preparing to publish its defense policy paper for the first time in four years later this year, according to ministry officials Tuesday. The biennial defense white paper had not been updated since 2022, in the wake of a failed martial law bid in late 2024 by former President Yoon Suk Yeol. A draft version of the 2024 defense policy paper had been updated, but its formal publication was delayed due to the aftermath of the martial law turmoil. The new defense policy paper is expected to be published by the end of this year. If published, attention will focus on how South Korea redefines its relations with North Korea or adjusts its alliance with the United States. A description of North Korea had been a key part of the basis of South

Korea's defense policy. In the 2022 white paper, the defense ministry described the North Korean regime and its military as "our enemy."

- Care workers press gov't for direct bargaining under new law (2026-03-17 11:57)

Care workers nationwide have launched a coordinated push to bring government ministries they call their "real employers" to the bargaining table, citing a new labor law that expands the legal definition of an employer. They threatened to go on strike if their demands are not met. During a press conference at the office of the Korean Confederation of Trade Unions (KCTU), a powerful umbrella organization with more than 1 million members, the KCTU and affiliate unions said they have recently demanded that 57 ministries and public agencies hold talks with them as principal employers under the so-called "yellow envelope law" that came into force last week. Union leaders said most care workers — including elder-care aides, child care staff, disability support workers and home-care helpers — are formally hired by outsourced private facilities but effectively governed by state-set fees and guidelines, and that more than 2 million workers nationwide fall under this category, according to KCTU estimates. The government bodies they seek direct bargaining with include the Ministry of Health

- PPP reform drive questioned as incumbents cut while Seoul mayor is courted (2026-03-17 11:57)

The People Power Party's (PPP) local election nomination committee is facing criticism for its contradictory approach — barring incumbents from the race in some regions while repeatedly reopening registration in Seoul to recruit current Mayor Oh Se-hoon. This inconsistency has fueled concerns that the main opposition party's "reform" drive may be motivated more by internal political calculations than by a desire to be more competitive. The party's committee on Monday decided to cut off incumbent North Chungcheong Governor Kim Young-hwan from the nomination process and reopen candidate registration before selecting a final nominee. This is the first time the committee had excluded a current metropolitan-level head since its launch. Nomination committee chief Lee Jung-hyun defended the decision, saying the party must show voters a willingness to change rather than settling for stability. "What the PPP needs to demonstrate is not politics as usual, but politics that shakes itself up and transforms," Lee told reporters, emphasizing the need for political renewal. Kim immediately

- Defense chief says received no official US request on sending warships to Middle East (2026-03-17 11:57)

The defense ministry has not received any official request from the United States to deploy warships to the Middle East, Minister Ahn Gyu-back said Tuesday following U.S. President Donald Trump's call urging allies to send vessels to protect the Strait of Hormuz. Ahn made the remarks at a parliamentary session after Trump renewed his call Monday for South Korea, Japan, and other allies and partners to join U.S. efforts to keep the vital shipping route open, stressing Washington has long provided security protection to those countries. "The defense ministry has not received an official request," he told lawmakers when asked about the matter, adding he does not consider Trump's social media messages urging the deployment of warships constitute an official request. While noting that the ministry has held various internal discussions prior to an official request, Ahn said such details are not yet at the stage where they can be disclosed. He stressed that such a deployment "should be decided in consideration of national interest, public safety, the Constitution and law," and would be a matter

- Cabinet endorses special law on \$350 bil. investment pledge to US (2026-03-17 05:57)

The Cabinet on Tuesday endorsed a special law to facilitate Korea's $350 billion investment pledge to the United States, paving the way for implementation of the commitment under a bilateral trade deal reached last year. The approval came five days after the bill passed the National Assembly with bipartisan support, giving legal backing to a memorandum of understanding (MOU) signed between Seoul and Washington in November. The law will take effect three months after it is promulgated. At the core of the legislation is the creation of a joint corporation to carry out Seoul's $350 billion investment commitment, along with a strategic investment fund to be set up under the entity. Under the plan, $150 billion will be allocated to the shipbuilding sector, while the remaining $200 billion will go to projects that support the economic and national security interests of both countries. The corporation will have capital of 2 trillion won ($1.34 billion), fully funded by the Korean government. Details such as the timing and method of funding will be set by presidential decree. The passage comes ab

- Tourists can now buy Seoul transit passes with overseas credit cards (2026-03-17 05:57)

Seoul will introduce a new payment system allowing foreign tourists to purchase public transportation passes using overseas credit and debit cards, as the city expects an influx of visitors ahead of BTS' comeback performance on Saturday. The Seoul Metropolitan Government announced Monday that the Climate Companion Card — an unlimited public transportation pass valid within Seoul — and one-off subway tickets can be purchased using overseas credit and debit cards starting Tuesday. Purchases will be available through new ticket machines installed at 273 subway stations across Lines 1 to 8. Kakao Pay and Naver Pay will also be accepted. The policy is part of the city's efforts to address difficulties faced by foreign tourists, many of whom have been left confused in front of ticket machines that require cash. It is also intended to ease the inconvenience of having to search for currency exchange counters. Previously, overseas credit cards could not be used with Seoul's public transportation card readers, forcing many foreign visitors to buy one-off tickets using cash. The city said

- S. Korea launches committee for preliminary review of US investment projects (2026-03-17 05:57)

The South Korean government said Tuesday it has launched a committee to preliminarily review potential investment projects in the United States under a bilateral strategic investment agreement. The government published a presidential directive in the official gazette establishing a temporary implementation committee for the Korea-U.S. strategic investment memorandum of understanding (MOU) signed in November. The move marks a preparatory step toward establishing a new state-run corporation tasked with implementing Seoul's envisioned $350 billion investment in the U.S. after the National Assembly of South Korea passed a special bill to support the initiative last week. The special legislation will take effect three months after its proclamation. As part of efforts to speed up procedures to select U.S. investment projects before the law takes effect, Seoul launched the committee to conduct preliminary reviews of potential projects. The strategic investment MOU implementation committee, headed by the industry minister, will oversee investment consultations with Washington and assess the comm

- Defense, foreign ministries raided over presidential residence relocation (2026-03-17 05:57)

A special A counsel team raided the defense and foreign ministries Tuesday as part of its probe into suspicions linked to the presidential residence's relocation under former President Yoon Suk Yeol. The team said it was searching multiple locations, including the interior ministry and the Presidential Security Service, over alleged favoritism in connection with the relocation following Yoon's 2022 presidential victory. At the time, Yoon relocated the presidential office from Cheong Wa Dae to the defense ministry compound in central Seoul and moved the presidential residence to the foreign minister's official residence. The move drew scrutiny from critics, with a state audit into the relocation later finding irregularities and legal violations by the interior ministry and the Presidential Security Service. A company linked to the former first lady had also won a contract for the relocation without a proper license, raising suspicions of favoritism. The raid comes a day after the team searched the home and office of Rep. Yoon Han-hong of the main opposition People Power Party. An earlier spec

- Everything Seoul lined up for BTS fans (2026-03-17 05:57)

Seoul is transforming itself into an extended concert venue ahead of BTS' comeback show Saturday, with the city government rolling out a month of landmark lighting, themed festivals and guided tours designed to give the hundreds of thousands of fans — collectively known as ARMY — more than a single night out, the Seoul Metropolitan Government announced Monday. Starting Friday, the day the highly anticipated album "Arirang" drops, 15 city landmarks, including Sebitseom and Cheonggye Stream, will be lit in red — the color associated to the promotions of the new album — to mark their return, turning its skyline into a dynamic nighttime stage. City officials say the lighting is designed to make Seoul feel like a giant open-air performance space. To demonstrate the city's welcome, greeting banners will be hung along Sejong-daero near the Gwanghwamun concert venue and "welcome ARMY" messages will be displayed on 10 media facades across the city. Major tourist spots and traditional marketplaces will also show welcome phrases in seven languages — English, Chinese, Japanese, Vie

- Army halts small firearms training after elementary school student wounded by bullet in Daegu (2026-03-17 05:57)

The Army has suspended all shooting training involving small firearms after an elementary school student was wounded by a bullet in Daegu while such training was under way at a nearby military range, officials said Tuesday. The previous day, the student was wounded near the neck at a playground in the southern city of Daegu. The student was sent to a hospital to receive treatment for the non life-threatening injury and has been released. "Shooting training involving small firearms has been suspended across all Army units. We plan to assess when to resume such training after evaluating safety and risks at all firing ranges," an Army official said. The armed service is conducting an investigation to determine whether the accident was related to the firing training, and will seek to build more indoor firing ranges and vertical backstops in the long term to prevent similar safety accidents.

- Veterans ministry to launch team to track down remains of independence fighter Ahn Jung-geun (2026-03-17 05:57)

The veterans ministry will launch a public-private team this week tasked with tracking down and repatriating the remains of independence fighter Ahn Jung-geun (1879-1910), believed to be buried in China, the ministry said Tuesday. The 23-member team, comprising officials from the veterans, foreign and unification ministries, as well as historians and family members of the late independence fighter, will set sail Wednesday, the ministry said. Ahn was executed in 1910 for the assassination of Japanese Prime Minister Ito Hirobumi in China's Harbin the previous year. His remains are believed to be buried near Lushun Prison in the northern Chinese port city of Dalian. In his will, he requested that his remains be returned to Korea after national independence, but the exact location of his burial remains unknown. Last month, President Lee Jae Myung wrote on X, formerly Twitter, that the government is doing its best to excavate and repatriate his remains.

- Police nab Korean man over threat to bomb US airport (2026-03-17 05:57)

Police said Tuesday they have apprehended a Korean man on suspicion of posting a threat to bomb a U.S. airport last year. The 20-something man allegedly posted the threat on the website of a Detroit airport on March 20 after getting angry with airport authorities during a visit there. The post prompted local and federal police to launch a search for explosives. In January, U.S. Homeland Security Investigations requested the cooperation of the Korean police. The suspect was caught after police here secured related evidence during a raid on his home earlier this month. He has been referred to the prosecution on charges of making public threats, police said.

- DPK to push for plenary vote on prosecution reform bills this week (2026-03-17 05:57)

The leader of the ruling Democratic Party of Korea (DPK) said Tuesday the party plans to put prosecution reform bills centered on separating investigative and indictment powers to a vote at the National Assembly plenary session this week. Rep. Jung Chung-rae said the DPK, which holds a majority in the National Assembly, will push to bring the key prosecution reform bills to the floor during a plenary session on Thursday. The bills are follow-up measures to a government reorganization law that will abolish the existing prosecution service structure in October and outline the framework for launching new investigative and indictment agencies in the same month. "The party, the government and Cheong Wa Dae reached a compromise through close consultations," Jung said during a press briefing. "Provisions that had raised strong public concerns were either removed or revised." Jung said the bills aim to fully separate prosecutors' investigative and indictment powers, stripping prosecutors under the proposed indictment agency of their authority to direct police investigations or interfere in ongoing

- Korean, US Army troops hold combined drills in California desert (2026-03-17 05:57)

Korean and U.S. Army troops conducted joint drills in a desert in California earlier this month to enhance their combat capabilities and interoperability, the South's Army said Tuesday. Some 120 personnel, mostly from the 5th Armored Brigade, joined the exercise held at the U.S. National Training Center (NTC) in the Mojave Desert in California from March 4 to 15, according to the armed service. Participating troops engaged in a two-month training program ahead of their departure and held terrain reconnaissance and tactical discussions with their U.S. counterparts before conducting combat training. The training focused on sharpening counter-drone response capabilities to reflect new trends in modern warfare and familiarizing troops with command and control procedures in harsh climate and nighttime operations. First launched in 2014, the drills marked the 10th such combined exercise to take place at the U.S. training facility, which spans 2,400 square kilometers and is known for its tough desert training environment.

- Ex-President Yoon, wife face same court in separate trials (2026-03-17 05:57)

Former President Yoon Suk Yeol and his wife, former first lady Kim Keon Hee, face separate trials at the same court Tuesday for the second time over corruption and other allegations. Yoon is scheduled to appear at the Seoul Central District Court for his trial on charges of receiving free opinion polls from Myung Tae-kyun, a self-proclaimed power broker, ahead of the 2022 presidential election. He is accused of colluding with his wife to accept the polls in exchange for supporting former Rep. Kim Young-sun's nomination as a People Power Party candidate in the parliamentary by-elections later that year, following his presidential victory. In an earlier trial, the court acquitted Kim of the identical charge, ruling that the polls could not be recognized as economically benefiting the couple. Meanwhile, Kim appeared at the same court for her trial on charges of accepting various gifts allegedly in return for her influence in public office appointments. Kim is accused of receiving jewelry worth over 100 million won ($67,000), including a Van Cleef & Arpels necklace, from a construction company.

- Lee calls for cautious approach to prosecution reform amid hard-line DPK push (2026-03-16 11:57)

President Lee Jae Myung on Monday called for a measured and strategic approach to the ongoing prosecution reform to ensure it achieves its intended purpose, responding to hard-line calls within the ruling Democratic Party of Korea (DPK) for sweeping changes to the prosecution system. Lee made the remarks on his social media account on X, as some hardliners in the DPK have been pushing for far-reaching reforms aimed at sharply curbing prosecutorial powers. Their proposals include renaming the prosecutor general as the "chief of the indictment agency" in line with plans to transform the prosecution service into a body focused solely on indictments. "The separation of investigation and prosecution, as well as the exclusion of the prosecution from investigative authority, has already been confirmed as a national policy task and is irreversible," Lee wrote. "It is difficult to understand why the title of prosecutor general should be changed to 'chief of the indictment agency,' which could leave room for controversy over its constitutionality." Under a government reorganization bill passed by

Samsung Electronics head Lee Jae-yong returning from Europe has caught online attention — this time because of his outfits. Lee returned to Korea on Friday after a visit to Europe, where he is believed to have met with European automakers to discuss Samsung's automobile electronics industry. Samsung SDI head Choi Ju-seon reportedly accompanied Lee on the trip. But it was Lee's outfit that quickly caught attention of people online. He was seen wearing a white vest over a suit, an item that some internet users said looked identical to one worn by a man believed to be Lee in a travel YouTube video filmed at a ramen restaurant in Kyoto last September. That earlier video, uploaded by a travel YouTuber, showed a man resembling Lee eating alone at the restaurant. The person's identity was never officially confirmed. But after photos of Lee's return from Europe circulated this week, some online commenters pointed to the apparent match in outerwear as reason to believe the man in the Kyoto video was in fact the Samsung chairman. The vest Lee wore is believed to be from Italian luxury brand

"Are you actually a human?" The voice of a middle-aged man, thick with anger, roars through the phone. For Lee Eun-young — a pseudonym for a woman in her 40s who works at the customer service desk of a major credit card company — the moment is nothing new. She pauses for a second before replying. "Yes, sir. I'm a human." This time, the caller does not calm down easily. "Since when did I say I wanted to talk to artificial intelligence (AI)?" he snaps. "You people let machines do all the work while you sit back and collect easy money?" The words sting. But they are not entirely surprising. Roughly one in four calls Lee receives each day now begins with complaints about the company's AI customer service system. No one at the company has shared the numbers with her. Still, she has a sense of how things are going from the pile of frustrations customers unload the moment they reach a real person. Customer service desk jobs like Lee's are experiencing the future arrive faster than other industries — and it is not a comforting one. For years, the job was widely seen as one of

- Seoul mayor snubs PPP primary again, fueling leadership speculation (2026-03-16 11:57)

Seoul Mayor Oh Se-hoon has twice refused to register as a candidate for the People Power Party's (PPP) Seoul mayoral primary, even as the main opposition party extended its registration deadline for a third time on Monday in an apparent bid to draw the incumbent into the race. The unusual standoff has fueled speculation that the mayor's decision may be part of a broader political calculation rather than a simple disagreement over the party's nomination process. Oh said he will not file for candidacy unless the party first commits to meaningful reform and clarifies its political direction before asking contenders to enter the race. The PPP's nomination committee reopened the registration window again and set Tuesday as the latest deadline for candidates to apply, with interviews scheduled for Friday. The repeated extensions were widely interpreted as an attempt to pressure Oh into participating. The move came shortly after Lee Jung-hyun returned as chair of the party's nomination committee, just two days after announcing his resignation. Lee publicly called on Oh to take part in t

- English kindergarten divide: Over 50% of children in southern Seoul attend, under 15% in north (2026-03-16 11:57)

Three in 10 students in Seoul have attended “English kindergartens,” with participation far higher in the city's southern neighborhoods than in those north of the Han River, suggesting parents in relatively affluent districts are far more likely to send their children to such programs. According to a survey by the Seoul Metropolitan Office of Education released Sunday, 29 percent of parents with children in kindergarten, elementary or middle school said their child is currently attending or has attended an English kindergarten. The survey polled 25,487 respondents in Seoul — 11,941 parents, 9,006 students and 4,540 teachers. In Korea, English kindergartens refer to private academies that teach young children — typically from around age 3 until they enter elementary school — primarily in English. They have drawn criticism for intensifying the private education industry. Last year, some lawmakers introduced a bill under which all cram school programs in English would be prohibited for children under 36 months. In Seocho District and Gangnam District, the two most affluent dist

Police said Monday they have identified three more victims of a 20-year-old woman who was recently arrested on suspicion of murdering two men with laced drinks. Kim So-young is accused of causing bodily injury to three additional men beyond the victims investigators had initially identified, a police official told reporters. Prosecutors earlier indicted Kim on murder and other charges for giving drinks spiked with benzodiazepine, a depressant, to three men between last December and last month. Two died, while one recovered. Further investigation found that Kim gave laced drinks to three more victims on separate occasions in Seoul between last October and January this year. A forensic analysis determined that one of the newly identified victims had benzodiazepine in his system. Kim met the threshold for psychopathy in a police-administered test. Her trial is scheduled to begin April 9.

Police said Monday they have sought an arrest warrant for a man accused of stalking and killing his ex-girlfriend while wearing an electronic ankle monitor. The 40-something man was apprehended by police Saturday shortly after he broke the windows of a car his former live-in partner was riding in, killed her and fled in his own car. The suspect broke his electronic ankle monitor before fleeing from the crime scene in Namyangju, Gyeonggi Province, to the nearby county of Yangpyeong. The Namyangju Bukbu Police Station said they filed for an arrest warrant for the suspect after consulting the prosecution and a court hearing on whether to issue the warrant will be held Tuesday. The suspect is currently being treated as he was found to have taken an undisclosed type of drug at the time of his apprehension. The case has sparked criticism that the authorities failed to protect the 20-something victim even though she was wearing a smartwatch as a subject of police protection and the man was under various restraining orders for stalking her. At a press briefing Monday, an official of the National P

The government plans to strengthen quarantine measures at local pig farms, slaughterhouses and fodder production facilities, after the African swine fever (ASF) virus was detected in pig feed, the agricultural ministry said Monday. According to the ministry, an epidemiological investigation found the ASF virus inside the ingredients and feed using porcine plasma, a digestible protein source derived from the blood of pigs. The government suspects blood from an infected pig was mixed in and has decided to discard all fodder suspected to be infected, while recalling more than 490 tons of feed related to the problematic manufacturer, it added. The move came as the country reported a yearly record of ASF outbreaks, 22 cases, in less than three months since the start of this year. The figure marks a sharp increase compared to the combined tally of 17 for the last two years from 2024 to 2025. Quarantine authorities are also conducting a third round of inspections of pig farms nationwide until Friday. They are additionally carrying out daily blood tests on pigs slaughtered at some 64 slaughterhou

- Ruling party, gov't agree to submit extra budget bill by end-March (2026-03-16 05:57)

The ruling Democratic Party Korea (DPK) and the government agreed to draw up and submit this year's first supplementary budget bill to the National Assembly by the end of this month to help ease livelihood concerns that stem from the ongoing war in the Middle East, officials said Monday. The DPK and the government also agreed to gradually release 22.46 million barrels of oil from its strategic reserves over the next three months amid soaring global oil prices triggered by the Middle East conflict. The decision was made during a task force meeting attended by officials from the finance ministry, the Financial Services Commission and other agencies to discuss measures to stabilize energy supply and oil prices, Rep. Ahn Do-geol said in a press briefing. The planned release comes in line with an agreement among the 32 member countries of the International Energy Agency to make 400 million barrels of oil from their reserves available to the market. The contribution of each country in the collective endeavor was calculated in proportion to its share of the member countries' total oil consumpti

- Dispatching warships to Hormuz requires parliamentary approval: PPP floor leader (2026-03-16 05:57)

The floor leader of the main opposition People Power Party (PPP) said Monday any decision to dispatch Korea's warships to the Strait of Hormuz would require parliamentary approval, as U.S. President Donald Trump called on countries to send ships to the crucial oil shipping route in the Gulf region. The remarks by Rep. Song Eon-seog of the PPP came as Trump called on Korea and other countries affected by Iran's attempt to close the Strait of Hormuz to send ships to keep the strait "open and safe" on Saturday amid growing concerns over disruptions to shipping along the waterway. "The issue of deploying our military to a region with a high possibility of involvement in combat would be a grave decision," Song said during the party's supreme council meeting. "This is a matter that requires the National Assembly's approval in accordance with the Constitution and relevant laws." He also said the issue of deploying the Cheonghae naval unit, currently operating in the Gulf of Aden for anti-piracy operations, to the Strait of Hormuz would require parliamentary approval, stressing that it would ef

The second comprehensive special counsel team raided the home and office of Rep. Yoon Han-hong of the main opposition People Power Party on Monday over alleged favoritism surrounding the relocation of the presidential residence about four years ago. Investigators from the team began a search of the lawmaker's home and office in the morning to secure materials related to the presidential residence relocation and renovation in 2022. The raid is the first compulsory investigation by the second special counsel team, which launched last month to investigate 17 allegations that the three previous special counsel teams could not resolve. The charge of abuse of power was reportedly applied in the search and seizure warrant for Rep. Yoon. A previous special counsel team said the lawmaker was involved in the alleged favoritism while serving as the head of a task force on the presidential residence relocation, though it did not indict him due to insufficient investigation time. The controversy began when 21 Gram, an interior design company without a general construction license, was improperly chose

- Lee suggests adjusting basic pension payments for low-income seniors (2026-03-16 05:57)

President Lee Jae Myung on Monday floated the idea of adjusting basic pension payments for elderly people in proportion to their income level. Lee made the remarks in a post on the social media platform X, sharing a link to a news story about the government's plan to gradually ease the reduction in basic pension payments for couples aged 65 or older when both spouses receive the benefit. The adjustment is expected to begin next year, starting with low-income households. "A married couple growing old together should not face disadvantages," Lee wrote on X. "I have heard that there are even cases in which people opt for sham divorces to avoid reductions in their basic pension payments." Citing Korea's high suicide rate among the elderly, Lee said poverty remains one of the most serious challenges facing older adults and suggested it may be time to review the current pension structure. "If we want to reduce elderly poverty that can even drive people to take their own lives, we need to revise the current basic pensionsystem," he said.

- 3 Japanese punk bands ready to play Seoul (2026-03-15 23:57)

Japan has one of the oldest punk scenes in the world, dating back to the 1970s — certainly one of the first outside of the West, and probably the first in Asia. The Japanese punk scene has many close ties with neighboring Korea's own scene, which is much smaller and about 20 years younger, having started in the early 1990s. "Since Japan is the closest country to us and the cultures are similar, we've been performing with Japanese bands quite often for a long time," said Park Byung-sun, guitarist of the Korean band Pogo Attack. Park said he and his friends in the Korean scene have been collaborating with punk bands in Japan every year going back to about 2003. Now in his 40s, he mentioned that he lived in Tokyo for two years before turning 30, during which time he played in the Japanese band 00 Squad. This month, Korea is seeing an unusually high number of Japanese bands visiting, with three acts coming here for two separate tours over the next couple weeks. Yasumasa Okise remembers his first visit to Korea, during the 1988 Summer Olympics. "I was still a boy, but I remember th

Schools with high concentrations of students from migrant backgrounds have increased 2.6-fold in Korea over the past five years, while improvements in the educational environment for them have lagged behind. According to data submitted by the Ministry of Education to the office of Rep. Jin Sun-mee of the ruling Democratic Party of Korea, Sunday, the number of schools with high concentrations of students coming from migrant backgrounds rose from 47 in 2020 to 123 in 2025. Schools are designated as having a "high concentration" if they have more than 100 enrolled students from migrant backgrounds, accounting for 30 percent or more of the overall student body. By region, Gyeonggi Province has the largest number of high migrant population schools, at 52. It was followed by Seoul with 18 schools, South Chungcheong Province with 10, Daegu with eight and Incheon with seven. Daejeon, Ulsan and North Jeolla Province had the lowest numbers, with just one such school each. The increase comes despite Korea's steadily declining school-age population. With the June 3 local elections approaching, debate has resurfaced over voting rights for foreign residents as Korea's foreign population continues to grow. It has been two decades since the government allowed certain long-term foreign residents to vote in local elections, but critics argue that the current rules violate the principles of reciprocity and international fairness. The government first granted voting rights to foreign permanent residents in local elections in 2006 during the Roh Moo-hyun administration. At that time, the number of eligible foreign voters stood at just 6,726, but the figure has grown steadily — rising to 12,878 in 2010, 48,428 in 2014, 106,205 in 2018 and 127,623 in 2022. Under the current Public Official Election Act, foreign residents who have obtained permanent residency are allowed to vote in elections for local government leaders and local council members after three years of holding an F-5 visa. According to the Ministry of Justice, Korea had more than 1.6 million registered foreign residents as of December last year, including 220,788 permanent resi

(2026-03-15 11:57)

People in their 40s recorded the highest levels of stress in daily life among adults, marking a shift away from younger generations as economic pressures and workplace competition weigh more heavily on middle-aged Koreans. This generational shift reflects a broader socioeconomic reality, as the anxieties of midlife — compounded by stagnant wages and rising household debt — have eclipsed the pressures once felt mainly by younger Koreans entering the workforce. According to 2024 data from the Korea Disease Control and Prevention Agency on Sunday, from an annual survey of about 10,000 people, 25.9 percent of respondents age 19 and older said they feel “very much” or “much” stress in daily life — a level similar to the 25.5 percent recorded in 2014. Among age groups, people in their 40s recorded the highest stress rate at 35.1 percent — more than eight percentage points higher than in 2014. Those in their 30s followed at 34.7 percent, while adults ages 19 to 29 recorded 30.3 percent. In the 2014 survey, people in their 30s had reported the highest stress level at 34 percent,

President Lee Jae Myung said Sunday the government will step up efforts to identify more activists who took part in the democracy movement of 1960 and ensure they receive proper compensation and recognition. Lee made the pledge during a ceremony marking the 66th anniversary of the March 15 Democracy Movement in the southeastern city of Changwon. He is the first sitting president to attend the ceremony since it was designated a national memorial day in 2010. "As president of the Republic of Korea, I offer my heartfelt apology and comforting words to the bereaved families of the victims of the March 15 Democracy Movement who suffered great pain due to state violence. I will not forget your noble sacrifice," Lee said in his address. The democracy movement began March 15, 1960, in Masan, now part of Changwon, as protests against widespread election fraud during the presidential election under then President Rhee Syng-man. The demonstrations later spread nationwide, sparking the April 19 Revolution the following month, a watershed event that led to Rhee's ouster. Lee vowed the government woul

Authorities will restrict access to 31 buildings near Gwanghwamun Square before a full-group comeback concert by BTS on March 21, seeking to prevent unauthorized rooftop viewing and possible safety hazards. With crowds of up to 260,000 expected on the day of the concert, the restrictions reflect police plans for strict security amid safety concerns over the massive

According to Korean media reports Sunday, the Seoul Metropolitan Government and police designated 31 buildings near Gwanghwamun Square as priority monitoring sites and are coordinating safety measures with building managers. Last week, police reportedly asked managers of six buildings directly adjacent to the square to close front entrances the day of the concert and allow access only through rear entrances to prevent spectators from bypassing the area's 31 official access points and reaching the concert site without authorization. Google's artificial intelligence program AlphaGo defeated South Korean Go master Lee Se-dol 4-1 in a five-game match in Seoul in 2016, marking a historic milestone in AI development. Developed by Google DeepMind, AlphaGo used deep neural networks and reinforcement learning, improving through self-play rather than relying solely on brute-force calculation. Plants bloom and fade in their season. Petals and leaves fall at their appointed time, and the remarkable mystery is that plants prepare the place where a petal will eventually let go, writes the Korean botanist and award-winning botanical illustrator Shin Hye-woo in her book “A Botanist’s Forest Diary.” They produce a substance called lignin along that line, forming a kind of natural seam. When the moment comes, the petal slips away cleanly from the plant, parting at precisely the spot where it
