Security Analysis Report: Hong Kong (November 05 - November 12, 2026)

Executive Summary

Hong Kong's security landscape during this period was marked by significant developments in both political and cyber spheres. The sentencing of pro-democracy activist Joshua Wong under the National Security Law drew widespread international condemnation, highlighting ongoing tensions regarding human rights and autonomy. Concurrently, the city faced an elevated cyber threat, with a notable increase in overall security incidents and ransomware attacks, largely attributed to AI-aided methods. The government continued to bolster its cybersecurity defenses and legislative framework, including new measures to criminalize cyberflashing and enhance teacher vetting. Regionally, China's military exercises in the Western Pacific underscored broader geopolitical dynamics, impacting Hong Kong's strategic environment.

Key Security Developments

- Harsh Sentencing Under National Security Law

On November 5, 2026, prominent pro-democracy activist Joshua Wong was sentenced to 10 years in prison for "conspiracy to collude with foreign forces" under the Beijing-imposed National Security Law. This marks his second conviction under the controversial legislation, bringing his total potential detention to 16 years for exercising fundamental rights and freedoms.

- International Condemnation of Wong's Sentence

The sentencing of Joshua Wong prompted strong reactions from the international community. The UN Human Rights Office expressed deep concern on November 6, stating the conviction and sentence were "flagrantly incompatible with international human rights law." The UK and US condemned the sentence on November 5, with a UK Foreign Office spokesperson calling it a "clear example of how the National Security Law is being used to target individuals for political expression." On November 6, a joint statement from ten countries, including the "Five Eyes" allies and the European Union, called for an immediate end to "unjust prosecutions" under the law.

• China Rejects Foreign Interference

In response to international criticism regarding Joshua Wong's sentencing, Chinese Foreign Ministry spokesperson Guo Jiakun stated on November 5 that "relevant parties need to respect China's sovereignty and the rule of law in Hong Kong" and "stop interfering in Hong Kong's judicial affairs and China's internal affairs in any form." The Hong Kong government also condemned what it called "smears and slanders" from various countries.

• Increase in Cybersecurity Incidents

The Hong Kong Computer Emergency Response Team Coordination Centre (HKCERT) reported on November 5, 2026, that security incidents increased by approximately 15% in Q3 2026 compared to the same period in 2025, totaling 4,404 incidents. Phishing remained the primary threat, accounting for about 61% of all incidents.

• Rise in AI-Aided Ransomware Attacks

On November 8, 2026, Hong Kong police reported a 17.6% rise in ransomware cases in the first three quarters of the year, reaching 40 cases compared to 34 in the same period last year. Chief Superintendent Raymond Lam Cheuk-ho attributed this increase to hackers utilizing various forms of Artificial Intelligence (AI) to probe corporate computer systems for vulnerabilities, significantly reducing attack costs and increasing effectiveness.

• Data Breach at CITIC Pacific

A data breach affecting CITIC Pacific Limited, a diversified investment and operating company based in Hong Kong, was discovered on November 10, 2026. The breach was claimed by a threat actor named "KRYBIT," though the leak size and verification by Breachsense remain unknown.

• Ongoing Investigations into Airline and Retailer Data Breaches

The Office of the Privacy Commissioner for Personal Data (PCPD) continued formal investigations into data breaches reported by several high-profile companies, including Cathay Pacific, Hong Kong Airlines, Malaysia Airlines Berhad, YOHO Hong Kong, and Broadway. As of late October 2026, dozens of complaints and inquiries had been received, with individual victims losing up to HK$1.5 million in post-breach fraud exploiting leaked information.

• New Legislation to Criminalize Cyberflashing

The Hong Kong government announced on November 11, 2026, that the Sexual Offences Legislation (Amendment) Bill 2026 would be gazetted on November 13. This bill aims to modernize sexual offense laws and includes provisions to criminalize "cyberflashing" through the refinement of existing provisions.

• Enhanced Vetting for Teachers with National Security Provisions

On November 12, 2026, it was reported that the Education (Amendment) Bill 2026, to be gazetted on November 13, will require all school teachers in Hong Kong to hold practising certificates. Crucially, the bill will bar individuals convicted of national security offenses from teaching in schools, applying to principals and teachers in all types of educational institutions.

- China's Regional "Area Denial" Military Drills

China is conducting "area denial" military exercises in the Western Pacific, involving its Liaoning aircraft carrier group and other naval formations. Taiwan's Defense Minister Wellington Koo confirmed these exercises on November 9, 2026, describing them as designed to restrict the ability of outside forces to intervene in a potential conflict. While not directly in Hong Kong, these drills contribute to the broader regional security environment.

Cyber Threat Landscape

Hong Kong faced a dynamic cyber threat landscape during this period, characterized by a significant increase in overall incidents and the growing sophistication of attacks. HKCERT reported a 15% rise in security incidents in Q3 2026 compared to the previous year, with phishing remaining the dominant threat, accounting for 61% of all cases. These phishing campaigns are becoming more targeted and effective, leading to unauthorized credit-card transactions and substantial financial losses, as evidenced by over 700 reports of suspected credit-card misuse in mid-September 2026, totaling approximately HK$14.7 million in losses.

Ransomware attacks also saw a notable increase, rising by 17.6% in the first three quarters of 2026. This surge is largely attributed to the use of Artificial Intelligence (AI) by attackers, which enables them to probe corporate computer systems for vulnerabilities more efficiently and at reduced costs. Several data breaches were reported or under investigation, including a newly discovered breach at CITIC Pacific Limited on November 10, 2026, claimed by the threat actor KRYBIT. Additionally, the Office of the Privacy Commissioner for Personal Data (PCPD) continued investigating breaches affecting major airlines (Cathay Pacific, Hong Kong Airlines, Malaysia Airlines Berhad) and retailers (YOHO Hong Kong, Broadway), where leaked customer data was exploited for post-breach fraud, resulting in individual losses up to HK$1.5 million.

In response to these threats, the Hong Kong government is actively enhancing its cyber policy and response. The Digital Policy Office (DPO) launched the "Secure AI@Work Enablement Campaign" in mid-2026 to help organizations adopt AI securely and responsibly. The Hong Kong police have also developed an AI-powered system, "Rapid," which was used in a year-long joint operation with Interpol to detect and remove over 51,000 phishing links. Furthermore, the "Hong Kong Cybersecurity Attack and Defence Drill 2026," which concluded on October 31, involved 51 defending teams from government, public, and private sectors, and 23 attacking teams, showcasing collaboration between Hong Kong and Mainland cybersecurity organizations to enhance overall resilience. Hong Kong's Protection of Critical Infrastructures Bill, effective January 1, 2026, introduces a comprehensive cybersecurity framework for essential services, mandating formal risk assessments, continuous monitoring, and supplier oversight. Background: Threat actors known to target Hong Kong include Lazarus Group, SAMURAI PANDA, APT40, APT3, Earth Lusca, LOTUS PANDA, BRONZE HIGHLAND, and TEMPER PANDA.

Geopolitical Impact and Regional Dynamics

The period from November 5 to 12, 2026, saw Hong Kong at the center of significant geopolitical friction, primarily stemming from the application of its National Security Law. The 10-year sentencing of Joshua Wong on November 5 for "collusion with foreign forces" triggered widespread international condemnation from the United States, the United Kingdom, the United Nations Human Rights Office, and a coalition of ten countries including the "Five Eyes" allies and the European Union. These reactions underscore persistent international concerns about the erosion of Hong Kong's autonomy and human rights, as guaranteed under the "one country, two systems" framework.

China, in turn, vehemently rejected these criticisms, with its Foreign Ministry spokesperson Guo Jiakun on November 5 urging external parties to cease interference in Hong Kong's judicial affairs and China's internal matters. This diplomatic standoff highlights the ongoing ideological divide between Beijing and Western democracies regarding Hong Kong's governance. The incident further solidifies the perception among some international observers that Hong Kong's legal system is increasingly aligned with mainland China's political objectives, potentially impacting its status as an international financial hub.

Regionally, China's broader military posture also influenced the strategic landscape. Taiwan's Defense Minister Wellington Koo confirmed on November 9 that China was conducting "area denial" drills in the Western Pacific, involving its Liaoning aircraft carrier group. These exercises, aimed at restricting external intervention in a potential conflict, contribute to heightened tensions in the Indo-Pacific. While not directly involving Hong Kong's military, these actions by Beijing reinforce China's assertive regional security strategy, with Hong Kong remaining an integral part of China's overall national security calculus. The continued focus on national security within Hong Kong, as evidenced by new legislation affecting teachers, reflects Beijing's determination to maintain tight control over the Special Administrative Region amidst these complex regional and international dynamics.

EU Relations and Implications

Hong Kong's relations with the European Union during this period were primarily characterized by diplomatic friction over human rights and a degree of alignment in cybersecurity policy. The EU, alongside other nations, strongly condemned the 10-year sentencing of pro-democracy activist Joshua Wong on November 5, 2026, under the National Security Law. This condemnation reflects the EU's ongoing concerns about the rule of law and fundamental freedoms in Hong Kong, which have been a consistent point of tension since the imposition of the National Security Law. Despite the "Stable" outlook assessed for EU relations in August 2026, such high-profile legal cases continue to strain diplomatic ties and underscore the EU's commitment to upholding international human rights standards.

Conversely, there is evidence of cooperation and alignment in the cybersecurity domain. Hong Kong's Protection of Critical Infrastructures Bill, effective January 1, 2026, is noted to align with international standards such as the EU NIS2 Directive. This alignment suggests a shared understanding of the importance of robust cybersecurity frameworks for critical sectors, potentially facilitating future digital and security cooperation. The EU's interests in Hong Kong, particularly in trade and investment, education, and development cooperation, could be impacted by the perceived erosion of autonomy and the heightened security environment. While cybersecurity cooperation offers a pathway for engagement, the political developments surrounding national security legislation pose challenges to the broader EU-Hong Kong relationship and the effective implementation of EU-funded cooperation projects.

Military and Defense Analysis

Hong Kong's military and defense posture is intrinsically linked to that of mainland China, with the People's Liberation Army (PLA) Hong Kong Garrison responsible for the city's defense. During this specific period, there were no direct reports of new military activities or defense acquisitions within Hong Kong. However, the broader regional military activities of the PLA are highly relevant to Hong Kong's strategic context.

On November 9, 2026, Taiwan's Defense Minister Wellington Koo confirmed that China was conducting "area denial" military exercises in the Western Pacific. These drills involved the PLA's Liaoning aircraft carrier group and other naval formations, with the stated aim of restricting the ability of external forces to intervene in a potential conflict. While these exercises are not physically located in Hong Kong, they demonstrate China's increasing naval capabilities and its strategic intent to project power and control access in key maritime zones surrounding its territory, including areas that could impact Hong Kong's security environment. The PLA Hong Kong Garrison routinely conducts training, as seen in its mobilization ceremony for the 2026 training year on January 4, 2026, to enhance combat capabilities and fulfill defense responsibilities. However, no specific training or modernization programs were reported for the garrison during this reporting period. Defense spending trends for Hong Kong are not independently reported but are subsumed within China's overall defense budget.

Outlook and Forecast

Short-term trends (1-3 months):

In the immediate future, Hong Kong is likely to continue experiencing heightened political sensitivity surrounding national security issues. The international condemnation of Joshua Wong's sentencing will likely persist, leading to continued diplomatic exchanges between Beijing and Western nations, including the EU. We can anticipate further legislative actions under the National Security Law, potentially impacting other sectors or individuals, as the government aims to "safeguard national security." The upcoming gazetting of the Sexual Offences Legislation (Amendment) Bill 2026 on November 13, which includes criminalizing cyberflashing, and the Education (Amendment) Bill 2026, barring national security offenders from teaching, indicate a continued legislative push to address perceived societal and security challenges.

Critical flashpoints and risk areas:

The primary flashpoint remains the ongoing application of the National Security Law and its impact on civil liberties. Any further high-profile arrests, trials, or harsh sentences of pro-democracy figures or activists could trigger renewed international outcry and diplomatic tensions. The cyber threat landscape is another critical risk area, with the reported increase in AI-aided ransomware and phishing attacks posing significant risks to both public and private sector organizations. The potential for major data breaches, especially involving critical infrastructure or financial institutions, remains high. Regionally, China's assertive military posture, particularly its "area denial" drills in the Western Pacific, could escalate tensions in the broader Indo-Pacific, with potential indirect implications for Hong Kong's economic stability and international standing.

Indicators to monitor:

Key indicators to monitor include further judicial proceedings under the National Security Law, particularly those involving foreign elements or international attention. The frequency and scale of cyberattacks, especially ransomware and data breaches affecting critical sectors, will be crucial in assessing the evolving cyber threat. Monitoring the Hong Kong government's response to these cyber incidents, including the effectiveness of new policies and defense mechanisms, is also important. On the diplomatic front, observe the tone and frequency of statements from the EU, US, and other international bodies regarding Hong Kong's autonomy and human rights. Any changes in China's military activities in the South China Sea or around Taiwan, and their rhetoric concerning Hong Kong's role in national security, should also be closely watched.

Strategic recommendations:

For organizations operating in Hong Kong, it is strategically recommended to significantly enhance cybersecurity defenses, particularly against AI-aided phishing and ransomware. This includes investing in advanced threat detection, employee training on cyber hygiene, and robust incident response plans, aligning with the upcoming Protection of Critical Infrastructures Bill. Businesses should also conduct thorough risk assessments of their third-party vendors and supply chains, given the reported vulnerabilities. From a diplomatic perspective, international actors should continue to advocate for the protection of human rights and the rule of law in Hong Kong through multilateral platforms, while also seeking avenues for constructive engagement on shared challenges like cybersecurity. For the Hong Kong government, a balanced approach that addresses national security concerns while upholding the city's unique legal and social freedoms would be crucial for maintaining its international reputation and economic vitality.

- Teachers face cert, security rules in new schools bill (2026-11-12 05:27)

School teachers in Hong Kong will be required to hold practising certificates and barred from classrooms upon conviction of national security offences under an education amendment bill to be gazetted on Friday. The Education (Amendment) Bill 2026 will apply to all teachers, including principals, in publicly funded, private and international schools as well as kindergartens. They will need to be registered and hold a practising certificate that is valid for no more than three school years. Teachers applying for a practising certificate will also have to meet continuing professional development requirements. The Education Bureau said this would help teachers keep up with changing local and global education policies and ensure their knowledge and teaching methods meet students' and society's needs. A bureau spokesman said the bill could boost public regard for the profession and lift teachers' standing in society. "As rolemodels and key persons for nurturing students, the words and deeds, conduct and values ofteachers have a profound impact on students," he said. "Amid the complex and rapidlychanging development of our society, the public and parents have increasingly highexpectations of teachers' professionalism. "The bill meets schools' actual operational needs,encourages teachers to keep pace with the times and strengthens teacher management, withthe ultimate goal of safeguarding the well-being of students." The bill also includes safeguardsto prevent people convicted of offences endangering national security from teaching in schools.The bureau has consulted the sector since September last year and the Legislative Council'seducation panel on February 6. The bill will be introduced to the Legislative Council for a firstand second reading on November 25. Edited by Tony Sabine

- Union says 12-hour family care leave is 'good start' (2026-11-12 05:17)

Civil Servants General Union chairman Fung Chuen-chung welcomed on Thursday a plan to give government employees up to 12 hours of family care leave a year, calling it a very desirable step forward in letting staff look after their families while also helping attract talent and raise morale. Asked on an RTHK programme whether 12 hours was enough, he said that was "hard to say" but that the cap could be reviewed after the scheme had been running for some time. "Every employee faces different problems at different stages of life," Fung said. "Some may have just gotten married and had a child while some older colleagues may need to look after elderly or sick parents – it really depends on individual needs. "But overall we feel that going from having no family care leave to having some is a very desirable step forward." Fung said he hoped the business sector would follow suit so that other employees can also have such leave. Potential abuse of family care leave provisions do not worry him, he said, as supervisors can always ask for proof if they have doubts. The leave can be taken in blocks of one to four hour and is expected to start in January. Edited by Tony Sabine

- Kai Tak site leader charged over bribes (2026-11-12 03:49)

The ICAC has charged a site team leader on the Kai Tak Hospital project with taking HK$75,100 in bribes from five imported electrical workers. Zeng Chusong, 52, of subcontractor Billion Best (E&M) Engineering, faces 10 counts of an agent accepting an advantage. He appeared at Tuen Mun Magistrates' Courts for mention on Thursday morning. The ICAC alleges that between September and November he accepted 10 bribes from the five workers, in return for helping them get jobs on the project. Their daily pay was HK$1,300. Fearing they would lose their jobs, they paid Zeng between HK$9,000 and HK$23,600. China State Construction Engineering (Hong Kong), the main contractor, had applied under the Labour Importation Scheme for quotas used by its subcontractors, including the defendant and the five workers he referred to the site. An ICAC said it maintains a zero-tolerance policy toward corruption and will continue to collaborate with the Development Bureau and other stakeholders to prevent the recurrence of crimes similar to this case. "Construction workers who are solicited for bribes in exchange for employment should refuse immediately and report it to the ICAC," a spokesman said in a

• Higher standards set for arts groups' funding overhaul (2026-11-12 03:44)

The Hong Kong Arts Development Council said on Thursday that the government's move to tie the funding mechanism for major performing arts groups to performance and artistic merits will encourage the industry to deliver higher performance standards. Under the new mechanism, a baseline subvention and a performance-based grant will each occupy half of the annual allocation. The performance-based subvention will be calculated based on major performing arts groups' non-government revenue, along with key performance indicators, such as their audience sizes and governance. Medium-sized arts groups could be promoted to become major ones if they continuously deliver an outstanding performance in those areas. Better performing groups can receive more funding, while underperforming ones could lose their status. The reform will be launched gradually starting 2027-28, before it is fully implemented in 2032-33. Speaking on RTHK, the council's vice-chairman Chris Ip said that the move would help to cultivate arts groups. "First, I believe after the reform, it will allow major performing arts groups, no matter the pursuit of artistic merits, administration and talents, they will have a goal to do better. This will contribute to the healthy development for arts groups and the ecosystem of the whole cultural and arts sector," he said. "Second, I have also noticed that there is a promotion ladder for medium and small-sized arts groups to have a goal to be able to do better." He said that the five-year transitional period offers enough time for arts groups to plan ahead and make changes, adding that they often come up with a blueprint for the next year or two. The overhaul comes as the government's annual funding to nine major performing arts groups rose more than 104 percent to about HK$450 million over the past two decades, but audience sizes and attendance rates have dropped. Executive director Celina Chin from the Hong Kong Chinese Orchestra – one of the city's major performing arts groups – told RTHK that she believed the decrease was also observed among smaller arts groups. She believes this was partially due to a lower birth rate, saying that families used to watch performances together, and that the sector has to look for other audience groups now. The sector has also been adapting to changes in people's lifestyle, she said. "People prefer to stay home and go out in the evening," she said. "We can see that a lot of arts groups have adjusted their admission time or the performance time of their concerts to respond to that." Chin added that while arts groups will face pressure under the new mechanism, it is not a bad thing, saying that they will have to change direction or make sacrifices to maintain their positions. • CE hails spirits of national rejuvenation (2026-11-12 03:35)

Chief Executive John Lee on Thursday said the SAR government was working to enrich resources for patriotic education, providing a broader platform for the younger generation to learn about national affairs. Speaking at a ceremony to commemorate the 160th anniversary of the birthday of Sun Yat-sen, Lee said the national hero had deep ties with Hong Kong – the birthplace of his revolutionary ideas. The best way to commemorate Sun is to carry forward his spirit of revitalising the nation, he said, adding that the city’s first five-year plan had proposed to stepup patriotic education. “The SAR government attaches great importance to patriotic education,and is making continuous efforts to promote mainstream values centred on the affection forour country and Hong Kong and in conformity with the ‘One Country, Two Systems’ principleto strengthen people’s sense of identity with the country and Chinese culture, enhancenational confidence and pride, and foster a conscious commitment to upholding national unityand solidarity,” Lee said. The CE went on to say that the SAR government would continue tohost mainland study tours for students while supporting non-governmental organisations inhosting youth exchange programmes, so that youngsters in the city could experience firsthandthe nation’s history, culture, and latest developments. He urged people to make contributionsto the country’s development and the great rejuvenation of the Chinese nation. Edited by TonySabine

- School told to step up values education in vaping case (2026-11-11 14:50)

The Education Bureau on Tuesday said it reached out to a secondary school in Tsuen Wan, after a video, purportedly showing a female student vaping inside a toilet with her schoolmates, went viral online. The video, which was posted on social media, showed several female students in school uniform taking a selfie inside a cubicle. One of them could be seen holding an e-cigarette. Po Leung Kuk Yao Ling Sun College later confirmed they were its students. The school said it was "very concerned" about the case, and had already set up meetings with their parents. "We are committed to nurturing students’ good character, and there are disciplinary and counselling mechanisms to provide students with appropriate support and guidance," a statement read. Responding to media enquiries, the Education Bureau said it was aware that the school had activated its crisis management mechanism. It reminded the school to strengthen efforts to cultivate correct values and behaviour among students. Edited by Aaron Tam

- Abby Choi killed by ex-husband, court heard (2026-11-11 10:43)

The former brother-in-law of celebrity Abby Choi told the High Court on Wednesday that his brother – her ex-husband – killed her. On the 35th day of the trial, Kwong Kong-kit was asked by his counsel who killed Choi. Kwong, who did not respond at first, said it was his brother after the Deputy High Court Judge Brian Keith said he noted Kwong had nodded, telling him to answer the defence’s question. Kwong also said he did not know that Choi would be killed or hurt on the day of the incident. The former brother-in-law told the court that he attended a gathering with Choi and her husband a week prior to the incident, saying it was the last time that he had a meal with Choi. Kwong Kong-kit, Choi’s ex-husband Kwong Kong-chi, and herformer father-in-law Kwong Kau, were charged with murdering Choi on February 21, 2023 atLung Mei Village in Tai Po, and with preventing the lawful burial of her body. Edited by AaronTam

- HK ranks 11th in digital and AI competitiveness (2026-11-11 08:55)

Hong Kong is 11th in the world and fourth in Asia for digital and artificial intelligence competitiveness, according to a ranking unveiled on Wednesday. The International Institute for Management Development's World Digital and AI Ranking 2026 covered 70 economies. Hong Kong ranked second for workforce development, fifth for efficiency and 10th for technology and infrastructure. It came first worldwide in technological framework, practices, and education and training at the sub-factor levels. The government said the result recognised Hong Kong as one of the world's most competitive economies in digital and AI development. "Following the directions set out in the First Five-Year Plan for Economic and Social Development of the Hong Kong Special Administrative Region, the Hong Kong Special Administrative Region Government is fully committed to developing Hong Kong into an international I&T centre," a spokesman said in a statement. "Among other things, Hong Kong will enhance the institutional framework for I&T development, expedite the alignment with key national strategies in technology, and develop the new 'three major I&T parks and five key research and development (R&D) institutions' paradigm." - Hong Kong opens international police academy (2026-11-11 08:53)

Hong Kong has opened a new international police academy aimed at strengthening cross-border law enforcement cooperation and training local and overseas officers, according to Chief Executive John Lee. Speaking on Wednesday at the inauguration ceremony of the Hong Kong International Academy of Policing, Lee said professionalism and operational excellence had helped make the city one of the world’s safest. He said the academy marked a new phase in which the force would build on its local strengths to expand international collaboration in leadership development and training. "The academy will deepen international police exchanges. It will do so through training programmes, police leadership forums and other outreach initiatives. The target is to train some 1,000 officers each year, including about 200 overseas law enforcement personnel," he said. "Training is the academy's core function, but its significance goes further. By bringing law enforcement leaders together, it will strengthen Hong Kong's international partnerships. "Stronger partnerships will, in turn, reinforce Hong Kong's role as a ' super connector' and 'super value-adder' — a place that links people and expertise across jurisdictions." Lee said security challenges are increasingly complex and borderless, citing cybercrime, financial fraud and terrorism as clear examples. "No jurisdiction can stand alone. Strong international connectivity is therefore vital to global security and prosperity," Lee said. The academy, he said, is intended to improve cooperation in three areas: infrastructure and operational networks; rules, mechanisms and procedural standards; and people-to-people ties that build lasting trust with partner jurisdictions. It has set an ambitious schedule, with more than 20 major international training programmes and forums planned by the end of next year.They include ConvergeHK, a new senior leadership policing forum on shared securitychallenges, which is expected to draw police leaders from Asean, Belt and Road and Middle Eastcountries next April. Lee said he was confident the academy would become a hub forinternational exchange and a strategic investment in shared security, attracting lawenforcement agencies from around the world to work towards a safer future. The Hong KongInternational Academy of Policing will share premises with the Hong Kong Police Collegecurrently located in Wong Chuk Hang. Edited by Tony Sabine

- Five plead not guilty in renovation-bribery trial (2026-11-11 08:43)

The District Court on Wednesday heard that five men allegedly conspired to offer bribes in a bid to secure a major renovation project of a residential building in Kwun Tong. The five defendants, charged with conspiracy to offer advantages to an agent between September 2022 and January 2023, all pleaded not guilty. In the opening submissions, the prosecution said three of the defendants – Chong Chun-to, Lam Suet-pin and To Hon-sum – were believed to be key members of a syndicate. The other two are then chairman of the owners' corporation of Hing Tat Mansion, Cheung Kin-wah, and then member Zhan Qingbo. The prosecution alleged that Chong, Lam and To sought to offer bribes worth HK$2 million to Cheung, Zhan and other members of the owners' corporation in trying to win the HK$20 million contract. In exchange, the chairman and member of the owners' corporation were asked to use their positions to have designated firms appointed as the building’s property management company and building works consultant – crucial steps in securing the contract. The court also heard Chong, Lam and To asked Cheung and Zhan to praise companies linked to them within the owners’ corporation while belittling other contractors that offered lower prices. The prosecution said the defendants had carefully planned to manipulate the tender process. It said corruption and big-rigging activities in building renovation works would not only harm homeowners’ interests but also pose a threat to public safety. The trial continues on Thursday. - Lawmakers support NM bill as second reading resumes (2026-11-11 07:52)

Lawmakers have voiced their support for a bill that aims to fast track the development of the Northern Metropolis, as the second reading for the dedicated legislation resumed on Wednesday. Andrew Lam from the Election Committee noted that society had a strong consensus towards accelerating the mega project development in terms of speed, quality and efficiency. “The government, with the determination to break the shackles of the traditional systems, through special handling and the mindset of removing barriers and easing restrictions, established a brand new legal framework for the Northern Metropolis’ land development, infrastructure works, noise regulation, as well as cross-boundary flow of elements," he said. The DAB’s Yiu Ming suggested the government step up the public’s right to know and oversight by reporting to lawmakers of the latest developments more frequently. “I think that the government, after the legislation is implemented, should regularly publish quantitative indicators, such as the average handling time for different types of projects," he said. "At the same time, as the scale of the Northern Metropolis is enormous and involves large-scale landdisposal, I suggest the government increase the frequency of reporting to the LegislativeCouncil from once per year to once every six months.” Tam Chun-kwok said the mega hubserved as the new engine of the city’s future development, carrying important functions suchas innovation and technology industries, higher education, modern logistics and high-qualityliving environment. The project would be the main platform for the integrated development ofeducation, technology and talent, he said, as well as for the SAR to integrate into and serve thenation's development. The Bills Committee finished scrutinising the legislation in 12 meetingsthat took nearly 30 hours before the bill was tabled for the second reading debate. Edited byTony Sabine

- HK urged to chase long-term 'patient capital' (2026-11-11 06:36)

Hong Kong should go after money that stays put, not cash that flees at the first wobble, the Financial Services Development Council said on Wednesday, in a push to tighten the city's hold as Asia's wealth-management hub. The council has set out ways in a new report to attract this “patient capital” from pension funds and insurers at home, on the mainland and overseas. The council's Vice-Chairman, Ding Chen, said the report aims to turn Hong Kong into a long-term capital hub. "The central objective of this report is to make Hong Kong not only a place where capital is raised, and traded, but also place where capital is managed, invested, and reinvested over a longer period of time," she said. The report says there should be more products investors can buy, including bonds and a wider range of stocks, with tighter risk controls. It also calls for more cross-border channels, especially for pensions and insurance. Rocky Tung, the council's executive director, said this stickier money could be "the stabilising force" amid market swings, which supports new financial products and backs growth that lasts. " There is a lot of investment coming in and out of a market or an economy, and they are here only for the short run," he said. "And with that in mind, if there is anything less than ideal, they would pull the money out of the market and subsequently the economy. So that will create a lot of turbulence and it will exaggerate the economic cycle. "With patient capital, they have the mindset of a long-term vision, they are going to be the stabilising force." The report noted that mainland insurers held 41.3 trillion yuan in assets at the end of last year, but only 5.4 percent of that is invested outside the mainland — well below the 15 percent they are allowed. Mainland pension savings stood at 15.66 trillion yuan in 2024. The report said that as populations age, demand for more diversified cross-border investment and a better match between assets and long-term liabilities would bring unprecedented growth opportunities for Hong Kong's patient capital. - 'One Stanley steel work different from approved plans' (2026-11-11 04:44)

Development minister Bernadette Linn said on Wednesday that the Buildings Department has found that steel reinforcement work at a house in a luxury residential development in Stanley did not match the approved plans. The investigation was carried out after the residence at One Stanley was alleged to be built with fewer steel bars than approved. “The Buildings Department has largely completed its investigation, and found that some wire mesh and steelconfigurations were inconsistent with the approved plans," Linn said during a Legco meeting."The discrepancies were never reported to the authorities." She said the department willconsult the Department of Justice on possible prosecution. Linn also said checks would becarried out elsewhere at the luxury development. "The Buildings Department has orderedrandom inspections for 15 other houses and 12 units at six residential blocks in the samehousing estate, requiring the developer to appoint independent, accredited laboratories, andunder the supervision of authorities, to carry out relevant tests." She said enforcement actionswill be taken if violations are found. In light of the case at One Stanley, the secretary fordevelopment said contractors will have to take photos or videos of steel reinforcement workprior to concrete pouring at projects, and submit the record to the authorities. She expectsrelevant measures to be implemented in phases by January, adding that discussions with theindustry are currently under way. Edited by Edmond Fong

- Govt staff to get 12 hours of family care leave (2026-11-11 04:27)

Government employees will be able to leave work for a few hours at a time to look after family, under a new leave arrangement of up to 12 hours a year expected to start in January. Staff can use it to take a relative to a medical appointment, care for someone who is ill, attend a child's school activity, or deal with a sudden matter at home. In a paper submitted to a Legislative Council panel, the government said the leave would be taken in blocks of one to four hours, and unused hours cannot be carried over. In most cases, staff would only need to file a form with a reason beforehand, with no supporting documents required. If something crops up suddenly, they can get verbal approval first and submit the form afterwards. Approving officers could still ask for proof if they suspect abuse. The scheme was announced in this year's Policy Address and would be the fourth type of family-related leave for government employees. The Civil Service Bureau is still settling the details and will consult staff sides before it is rolled out. Since April 2024, more than 7,500 marriage-leave and 23,000 compassionate-leave applications have been approved. About 15,600 parental-leave applications have been approved since that leave began in April last year. Edited by Tony Sabine

- 'New light festivals must boost night economy' (2026-11-11 04:08)

Tourism representatives have welcomed the replacement of the city's decades-old multimedia light show, but say the new light festivals taking its place must deliver a genuine boost to the night economy. A Symphony of Lights, a nightly fixture over Victoria Harbour for 22 years, will hold its final performance next Wednesday. It will be replaced by light festivals staged at various locations at different times of the year. Speaking on an RTHK radio programme on Wednesday, Sara Leung, a consultant with the Federation of Hong Kong Trade Unions in Tourism, said the long-running show may have grown stale for some residents and visitors. She said change could be positive, noting that the tourism ecosystem is constantly evolving. "I think the new show is a good concept because it will be hosted in different districts, which lets visitors get to know Hong Kong better," she said. "But the most important thing is that whatever fireworks show or event you organise, it can drive business for the local districts and shops. Ithink that is the most meaningful thing." Leung added the harbour itself was a draw for visitorsand suggested authorities consider incorporating more local elements, such as restoring retiredfishing boats, to give it a new character. Meanwhile, lawmaker Perry Yiu, who previouslyrepresented the tourism functional constituency, said the show had helped draw attention toVictoria Harbour over the years, but a major overhaul would be costly and logistically difficultbecause it would involve dozens of buildings. He said different offerings, such as fireworks anddrone shows, could help make the harbour's night scene unique and in turn boost catering,retail and the economy. "The most important thing is to spend little and get good results, havesustainability, be more distinctive, and incorporate different festivals and seasons with differentthemes, so people feel fresh each time. That is most important," he said. Edited by Tony Sabine

- 'Northern Link savings won't compromise quality' (2026-11-11 04:06)

The Northern Link's lower cost estimate will not come at the expense of construction quality or safety, according to the Commissioner for Northern Metropolis Railways Raymond Ip. The government and the MTR on Tuesday signed the full Northern Link project agreement, and the Executive Council approved the financial arrangements for the second part of the plan. With both the main line and spur line now in construction, the project is estimated at HK$86.2 billion – 28 percent below the original forecast – and is set to launch by 2034. Speaking on an RTHK radio programme on Wednesday, Ip said the lower price tag came from changes to design, approval and construction methods. He said merging the main line and spur line into one project produced a "double reduction" effect: the spur line's construction period was brought forward by two years, and overall costs fell by 28 percent. Ip also spoke about what he described as a well-established monitoring mechanism. "For example, over the past few years, we have optimised the project monitoring and communication platform. Between us and MTR Corporation, we have also strengthened monitoring and auditing," he said. "In addition, there are proactive reporting and early warning mechanisms. Furthermore, before commissioning, the relevant departments will also carry out what we call safe and sound testing and acceptance procedures." Ip added that a one-stop Railway Checking Unit and an electronic central approval platform cut the approval time of construction plans by 30 to 50 percent, while the Northern Metropolis Development Bill would further simplify procedures such as construction noise permit applications. - Exco green lights part two of the Northern Link (2026-11-10 14:08)

The government and the MTR Corporation on Tuesday signed the project agreement for the full Northern Link project, as the Executive Council approved the financial arrangement for the second part of the plan. Exco greenlit part one of the project in July last year. This means that the main line and the spur line – expected to be commissioned simultaneously by 2034 – have fully entered the construction stage. The cost is estimated to be about HK$54.8 billion for part two of the project, while the entire project is estimated to cost about HK$86.2 billion – 28 percent lower than the initial forecast, due to the shortened construction period and cost-savingbenefits. Exco agreed to grant a total of eight sites located in Ngau Tam Mei Area, San Tin Area,Kwu Tung North Area and the proposed Au Tau New Development Area to the railway operatorfor residential and commercial development. A fixed lump sum will be deducted from the landpremium of the sites to help fund the MTR in carrying out part two of the project. The railwayoperator, for its part, said the estimated capital cost for the Northern Link is the most expensiveone among its works. It emphasised that it had been financially sound in recent years, and thatit increased cash flow by issuing bonds. The MTR said it does not rule out the possibility ofraising capital through ways other than bond issuance. Edited by Aaron Tam

- Operation Santa Claus unlocks HK's spirit of giving (2026-11-10 12:57)

Operation Santa Claus (OSC), a long-running annual fundraising campaign, officially launched on Tuesday to offer care and support for those in need across the city. Co-organised by RTHK and the South China Morning Post (SCMP), the fundraising event themed “Unlock the City’s Spirit of Giving” this year will support 13 local organisations that focus on serving children, the youth, elderly, people with disabilities, and mental health challenges in the community. At the launch ceremony, Director of Broadcasting Angelina Kwan noted the campaign has been helping people in need since 1988. “Through good times and difficult times, this campaign has continued. Year after year, people across our city have given their time, their energy and their support,” she said. “That consistency is what gives Operation Santa Claus its strong reputation in town.” “This city’s generosity has grown with each passing year, reaching hundreds of charitable projects and tens of thousands of lives,” Tammy Tam, SCMP's publisher said, noting that the generosity reached new heights last year when the deadly inferno at Wang Fuk Court occurred. “My deepest gratitude also goes to every donour. Whether you gave a little or a lot, you made this campaign what it is.” The launch ceremony featured a musical performance by singer Miriam Ma, along with young talents Yuet Ng and Yat Ng, to showcase how the smallest acts of courage and kindness can inspire the community. - Sino-US forum held in HK ahead of Apec summit (2026-11-10 10:26)

Global leaders across various fields will gather in Hong Kong ahead of the Apec leaders' summit in Shenzhen to discuss how Sino-US relations can be reshaped in search of long-term stability and cooperation. The annual US-China Hong Kong Forum will be held between November 15 and 17. James Chau, president of the organisers China-United States Exchange Foundation, said dozens of speakers would be joining the event, including former vice foreign minister Cui Tiankai, members of the Nixon and Bush families from the US, and former Thailand prime minister Abhisit Vejjajiva. “Through this forum we also bring regional perspectives into the discussion," Chau said. "So we've got Asean, for example, represented by Thailand, but also by Singapore. The [Sino-US] relationship affects more than two countries, so there's always that temptation to look at our work simply through the bilateral lens of China and the United States. “I wish it was like that because it seems very tidy, neat and easy to follow. But, in fact, everything that these two countries do and don't do, what they think and what they consider, is going to impact over eight billion people all around the world.” More than 300 participants will take part in the open forum on the second day, among them a group of university students from around the world. “Having young people in the room who are 18 to 25 years old who come from phenomenal schools of public policy and who would have spent part of the private sessions with us and then into the public sessions, we want them to ask the very first question during the audience Q&A to keep those leaders on the stage very sharp,” Chau said. The Apec summit will be held on November 18-19 in Shenzhen. Edited by Edmond Fong

- 'A Symphony of Lights' to go out with a bang next week (2026-11-10 09:41)

The Tourism Board said a multimedia light show that has been a nightly fixture across Victoria Harbour for more than two decades will be performed one last time on November 18. Board chairman Peter Lam said on Tuesday it's time to bring the curtain down on "A Symphony of Lights", which has thrilled millions of locals and visitors alike since 2004. "A Symphony of Lights, which has accompanied us in Hong Kong for 22 years, will perform its final show... with added pyrotechnic elements to commemorate this meaningful moment," he said. "As for other light and projection shows, we will continue to roll them out gradually next year." Financial Secretary Paul Chan, who announced a string of initiatives in this year's budget to enhance the city's tourism appeal, has said the long-running show will be replaced by "light festivals across various locations at different times of the year". Meanwhile, Lam said revellers can look forward to Hong Kong WinterFest, which will run from November 18 to January 5. He said that the annual Christmas and New Year celebrations will be the biggest ever. Under "Winter Wonderland", three festive installations will go up in Central, Tsim Sha Tsui and Causeway Bay, including a 22-metre Christmas tree at Statue Square Gardens. The traditional New Year's Eve countdown will culminate in a fireworks display over Victoria Harbour. There will also be shopping and dining discounts. Edited by Edmond Fong

- HK five-year plan offers UK long-term prospects: CE (2026-11-10 08:31)

Chief Executive John Lee on Tuesday said Hong Kong’s first five-year plan offered long-term prospects for UK companies, investors, and institutions and reinforced the city’s role as a bridge between China and the world. In a speech delivered at the British Chamber of Commerce, Lee pointed to the scale of the existing UK-Hong Kong economic relationship, noting that 770 British companies had a presence in the city last year, up seven percent year on year. Merchandise trade between the two places reached nearly US$20 billion last year, up 26 percent over 2024, while the UK ranked fourth in inward direct investment into Hong Kong and sixth in outward direct investment from the city at the end of 2024. "Those numbers reflect the strong ties between us. They also underline the continuing confidence British companies andinvestors have in Hong Kong," he said. Lee said the city's inaugural blueprint reinforced HongKong’s "four centres and one hub" – its status as an international financial, shipping and tradecentre, its development into an international innovation and technology centre and its role as ahub for high-calibre talent. He also identified the Northern Metropolis as a key growth engineunder the plan and as a way to deepen Hong Kong’s participation in the Greater Bay Area – acluster of some 88 million people with a combined GDP comparable to the world’stenth-largest economy. The project, adjacent to Shenzhen, will include three university townsspanning more than 1,000 hectares, with 300 hectares dedicated to campuses and theremainder to technology, industry, residential and recreational development. Lee invited UKcompanies, investors, universities and research institutions to explore opportunities there in lifeand health technology, AI, robotics and microelectronics. He also noted that Hong Kong’s fiveuniversities rank among the world’s top 100, and said the time was ripe to expandpost-secondary collaboration with the UK. He pointed to a recent London talent showcase – partof three UK events that together drew more than 4,500 visits – as reflecting British interest incareer opportunities in Hong Kong. Lee stressed the complementary nature of the UK-HongKong relationship, citing shared financial standards and different time zones. "With our similarfinancial standards, and different time zones – one of us is on the day shift, while the other is onthe night shift, covering the whole clock together," he said. "Complementarity has long beenone of the reasons you have confidence in the flourishing future we're building together."Edited by Tony Sabine

- Minibus driver arrested for alleged drug driving (2026-11-10 07:47)

A 44-year-old minibus driver was arrested on suspicion of drug driving on Tuesday after a rapid oral fluid test indicated he had taken methamphetamine before operating the vehicle. Acting on intelligence, officers from the Kowloon East traffic headquarters' enforcement and control division mounted a targeted operation, focusing on a driver operating a green minibus route between Yau Tong and the Anderson public transport terminus. Police intercepted the minibus and escorted seven passengers off the vehicle before conducting an oral fluid screening test on the driver. Preliminary investigations found he had consumed meth before driving, resulting in his immediate arrest. "This type of behaviour is not merely a violation, but poses a serious threat to the lives of passengers and other road users," senior inspector Poon Chun-ho said. He said drivers who knowingly take drugs that impair judgement and reaction but still operate public transport are placing the safety of every passenger at extreme risk, with potentially catastrophic consequences. The driver has been denied bail and is due to appear at Kwun Tong Magistrates' Courts on Wednesday. The operation followed the arrest of three other minibus and taxi drivers on suspicion of drug driving in June. Poon said two of them have since been convicted, with one slapped with a two-month jail term and a driving ban of two years and the other sentenced to four months in prison and receiving a five-year driving ban. The third driver has been released on bail pending trial. Edited by Tony Sabine

- 'SZ, HK should join hands to grow external trade' (2026-11-10 07:37)

As Shenzhen's maritime logistics industry has taken off in recent years, a senior official at one of the world's busiest container terminals said Hong Kong still had much to offer as the nation forges closer ties with the world. Yantian Port, in eastern Shenzhen, is a vital gateway between the nation's manufacturing engine and global markets. It handles more than one-third of Guangdong's foreign trade and a quarter of the country's container exports to the United States. According to the Shenzhen municipal government, the deep-water port handled 16.1 million TEUs, or twenty-foot equivalent units, in 2025, representing a 7.1 percent year-on-year increase. Lawrence Shum, managing director of Yantian, a subsidiary of Hutchison Ports, said the terminal operates nearly 100 international routes on a weekly basis. Fifty-three of those routes are linked to Apec economies. "Since the start of this year, we have added 14 new routes to and from Apec economies, further expanding our international network and fostering regional trade," he said. "According to the customs figures, Shenzhen continues to lead the country in both imports and exports to Apec economies. We even set a record in the first nine months of this year, with a trade value of 3.23 trillion yuan, a 40 percent jump." Shenzhen is the host of this year's Apec leaders' summit scheduled for November 18 and 19. Shum explained that Yantian had a unique advantage over other Shenzhen ports when handling shipments from inland regions. "Yantian houses Shenzhen's only railway that reaches directly into the port area. Through sea rail intermodal transport, port services can be extended to inland regions such as the southwest and central areas, making it more convenient for enterprises in Chengdu and Chongqing and bringing them closer to international markets," he said. Under Shenzhen's 15th Five-Year Plan, Yantian is to strengthen cooperation with Hong Kong's Kwai Tsing Container Terminals. Shum said six daily vessel trips between the two ports mean cargo can arrive at its destination in about six to eight hours. "For inland foreign trade enterprises, transportation time can be more stable, more efficient, and more environmentally friendly. Shenzhen and Hong Kong can further tap into inland cargo trade ... and achieve a win win for the three regions," Shum said. Edited by Tony Sabine

- Covid booster uptake stalls among high-risk groups (2026-11-10 06:55)

The Hong Kong Doctors Union warned that the city’s Covid-19 booster programme is losing momentum, citing low uptake among older adults and high-risk groups and limited access to vaccines in the community. According to the latest statistics from the Centre for Health Protection, only 717 Covid-19 booster doses were administered last month. Over the past 12 months, a total of 47,828 Covid-19 vaccines were administered in Hong Kong, said Ivan Hung, chair of infectious diseases and vaccinology in the department of medicine at the University of Hong Kong. Of these, 46,119 went to people aged 50 or above. Based on a population of about 3.62 million in that age range, the doses equate to only about 1.27 percent – reflecting a low vaccination rate among older adults. A questionnaire by the union found that 79 percent of the 300 doctors surveyed considered vaccination among older adults unsatisfactory. Nearly 40 percent said they did not proactively remind patients about Covid-19 jabs, while almost 60 percent of these doctors cited not having vaccines on hand. Hung warned that Hong Kong has annual Covid-19 seasonality and that the disease should not be taken lightly. "We expect the next surge to happen in probably a year's time, and when the antibodies drop to a low level,then there will be another surge of Covid," he said. Hung pointed to data from the centreshowing that there had been more than 170 severe cases or deaths in the recent period,describing the figure as large for high-risk individuals. He said access is a key barrier. Only 58public vaccination points, the union noted, remain at present and just 18 private clinics aredesignated Covid-19 vaccination stations, compared with the more than 1,000 private clinicsoffering flu jabs under the Vaccination Subsidy Scheme. Many people think Covid-19 is arelatively mild disease, Hung said, but high-risk groups do need boosters every six months. Theunion called for routine Covid-19 vaccine supplies under the Vaccination Subsidy Scheme,one-stop flu and Covid-19 jabs at family doctor clinics, and stronger public education. Hungstressed the importance of making the process simple, especially for older adults. "The currentvaccination programme could be similar to that of the flu vaccination; that means that if youwant to get a Covid-19 booster, then you don't need to get registered online," he said. "We justsimply walk into a general practice and get vaccinated, similar to that of the flu shot, and thecriteria for getting a Covid-19 shot should be similar to that of the flu shot, then that makesthings easier for both the doctors and the older adults." Medical professionals urged prioritygroups to receive updated vaccines on time to maintain immune protection, with such groupsincluding the elderly, those with chronic diseases, those who are expecting and healthcareworkers. - Balmy weather set to overtake cool spell later in week (2026-11-10 04:45)

The Observatory recorded a low of 17.5 degrees Celsius in urban areas on Tuesday morning – the lowest since autumn began this year. Acting senior scientific officer Lam Hok-yin said the city was being affected by relatively strong northerly winds. "When it's windy, body heat is easily blown away, so it feels colder," he said. "Everyone's constitution is different – so when it's windy and cold, we urge people to put on an extra layer before heading out." Lam said Wednesday morning would still be relatively cool, with urban temperatures around 18 degrees and the New Territories at least one or two degrees lower. But with sunny and dry weather, daytime temperatures may rise to around 25 degrees and should climb further later in the week, he pointed out. Looking ahead to winter, he said under the influence of global warming and the super El Niño, Hong Kong's temperatures are very likely to be normal to above normal, with more rainfall than usual. - Safety expert urges new layer to lift system checks (2026-11-10 04:29)

An elevator-safety adviser has urged improvements to the city's three-tier inspection process after 720 lifts were found to be missing fire-resistant door frame components. Maxine Yao, a member of the Electrical and Mechanical Services Department’s lifts and escalators safety advisory committee, made the call after Taizoom Elevator was ordered to complete remedial works by the middle of November for two public housing estates and within two to three months for the private buildings. The department's order followed the discovery that about 90 percent of lifts installed by Taizoom lacked the required door frame parts. Speaking on an RTHK radio programme on Tuesday, Yao called the number of lifts involved shocking and said thecurrent process for issuing use or resumption permits could be improved in light of thefindings. Under the existing three-tier system, a registered lift contractor carries out aself-inspection, a registered engineer performs an independent thorough examination and thedepartment's engineers then conduct an on-site re-inspection and functional testing. The cityhas long relied on an integrity-based system, Yao said, arguing that the mechanism could bestrengthened with an additional step. "This system has indeed been effective all along, exceptthat in the whole industry this time two engineers of Taizoom had problems. If you ask whetherwe need to do better, I agree," she said. "I have said I hope the department can introduceindependent third-party inspection to add one more step in the middle tier to ensure publicsafety." Yao also welcomed the department's proposal to expand the digital video andphotographic log-book system – currently used to record work details for lifts and escalators –to cover lift upgrades and replacements. "The department has found that since we already havesuch a good system and platform, why not update it to include upgrading and replacing lifts tooin response to public demand," she said. "I think that is a very proactive plan." Yao noted thesystem was still awaiting updates and said she hoped the department would complete theupgrade before the end of the year to prevent similar incidents from happening again. - Contractors get non-compliance notice over MTR project (2026-11-09 14:20)

The MTR Corporation said on Monday that it had issued a non-compliance notice to the contractors in charge of the Tung Chung West station construction. This came after around 30 columns there were found to be substandard. The railway operator said that it is strictly following up on the mistakes by the relevant contractors, the way they handled the matter and issues over responsibilities. The company is now awaiting a comprehensive report from contractors, along with a remedial proposal. The MTR said it attaches great importance towards railway projects' supervision and work quality, and it will continue to carry out inspections as well as adopt other monitoring measures to ensure quality. The firm will continue to maintain close contact with relevant government departments to ensure that the safety and quality of the works meet the contractual standards during construction and upon completion. It added that it will fully cooperate with the government to probe the incident, and submit a report on time on the cause, remedial plan, as well as the follow-up actions with contractors. The MTR reiterated that it will not tolerate any substandard engineering practices, and it will seriously follow up on the matter. Edited by Aaron Tam

- TDC expects over 3k participants at annual IP forum (2026-11-09 10:43)

More than 3,000 participants are expected to join an annual forum held by the Trade Development Council to exchange ideas on intellectual property (IP) development and hunt for business opportunities. The Business of IP Asia Forum will be staged at the Convention and Exhibition Centre in Wan Chai on November 19 and 20. Themed “Powering Commercial Success Through IP and Innovation”, the council’s associate executive director Silas Chu said nearly 100 speakers will discuss how IP and innovation can be used to build competitive advantages and draw capital investments, among others. He said that for the first time, the forum will include a new chapter centred on IP commercialisation that aims to better help enterprises manage their IP. “Previously in the BIP Asia forum, we may be focusing more on creative IP,” Chu said. “But as Hong Kong moves towards the goal of becoming an international I&T centre, we are increasingly seeing a lot of interesting development, especially in the area of AI, in the area of life science and all those deep tech. There will be surging demand as a result.” A startup from the Education University, which is pioneering their AI-enabled storytelling robot to help with students’ learning, is joining the forum. Its director Hades Ho said he hopes to talk to potential clients and experts on how to expand the use of their project. “Now our robot is mainly focused on the education aspect. But to be honest, this robot can [be] used in other aspects, for example, we have some further research on elderly, how to use this robot on elderly,” he said. The Entrepreneur Day that features more than 370 startups and innovation projects across 14 countries and regions, will be held alongside the two-day forum, allowing companies that have just kick-started their operations to conduct business matching and to help them expand. - 40 stranded in mid-air as Ocean Park Tower ride stalls (2026-11-09 10:13)

Dozens of visitors had to be rescued from Ocean Park's observation tower ride on Monday afternoon, after the cabin malfunctioned and stopped mid-air. The 72-metre-tall sightseeing tower is believed to have been brought to a halt by a breakdown, with the Fire Services Department saying it had been alerted to the incident at around 3.30pm. Ocean Park staff used a backup stairwell to evacuate roughly 40 people trapped, while one person who reported feeling unwell was taken to the ground by a firefighter. The director of Electrical and Mechanical Services, Poon Kwok-ying, said the department would investigate the incident to determine the cause. This is the second incident involving the ride in slightly over a year, with the tower attraction also brought to a halt in May 2025, when its safety mechanism was triggered. Passengers were stranded for nearly two hours at that time. The tower, located about 200 metres above sea level, sits on Nam Long Shan and offers panoramic views of Deep Water Bay. - EMSD orders Taizoom to fix 720 non-compliant lifts (2026-11-09 09:39)

The Electrical and Mechanical Services Department (EMSD) has ordered Taizoom Elevator Company (HK) Limited to complete repairs at two Tenants Purchase Scheme estates by mid-November and to finish remedial work on the remaining private-building lifts within two to three months. EMSD Director Poon Kwok-ying said 720 lifts installed by Taizoom – about 90 percent of the total – had not been fitted with door-frame components required by law. Theseinclude lifts in 11 blocks across two Tenants Purchase Scheme estates and in another 338private buildings. Poon said about 900 lifts in 480 buildings installed by other registered liftcontractors had been sampled and inspected, and all were confirmed to have the requireddoor-frame components installed. He said preliminary evidence showed that Taizoom wassuspected of serious negligence and misconduct in lift works, and the EMSD will continue itsinvestigation. Poon said a report was made to the police on October 16 because the incident issuspected to involve criminal acts of fraud and providing false statements. The police areconducting a criminal investigation. Citing a fire consultant’s assessment, Poon said the vastmajority of the lifts lacking door-frame components were old-style lifts that had been inoperation for more than 30 to 50 years, and the buildings concerned were completed before1990. “At that time, the requirement for landing doors was 60 minutes of fire resistance, andthere was no requirement for specific door-frame components,” he said. “The new doorpanels installed by Taizoom passed the fire-resistance test under BS 476, Part 22, to a rating ofat least 120 minutes. So, even without the missing frame components, the overall level of firesafety after the new panels were installed is not lower than it was before.

“Nevertheless,failing to install the required components is still unlawful. The EMSD has instructed Taizoom tocarry out remedial work on the lifts in the affected buildings as soon as possible. Taizoom mustpay all associated costs.” The department has launched a comprehensive review andexamination covering new lift installation and major alteration works, inspection andmaintenance, and the registration regulation and approval system under the Lifts andEscalators Ordinance. It will also strengthen inspections and sampling, use digital records forworks, and apply technology to enhance the overall quality of lift works. The review is expectedto be completed before the end of this year. Edited by Aaron Tam

- Non-binding motions to come with research data: Legco (2026-11-09 09:07)

The Legislative Council on Monday said that from next year, members must submit their research findings and relevant suggestions when they table a non-binding motion. Speaking at a luncheon attended by Chief Executive John Lee, the Executive Council and government officials, Legco President Starry Lee said the move was to make public policy discussions more " scientific". "This will help the government and public better understand the intent and rationale of the motions, as well as for the public to understand debates in the chamber," she said. According to Legco's website, members can move motions "not intended to have legislative effect" to express their views on issues of public concern, or call on the government to take certain actions. Lee also pledged to continue supporting the administration in improving its governance efficacy by providing policy recommendations. "The Legislative Council and its committees have so far conducted 21 local surveys on various topics. In the future, Legco will conduct more site inspections and strengthen policy advocacy capabilities," Lee said. "I will work with the Legco Secretariat, and I also welcome the participation of members, to regularly select important issues for site visits, with the aim to come up with solid recommendations for the SAR Government, Legco committees and society to follow up." She added that the Legco

Secretariat has been using technology and big data to make the chamber more public-friendly.Recapping the legislature's work, Lee said more than HK$130 billion of funding requests hadbeen approved so far this year, with approximately one third of those funds going to projects inthe Northern Metropolis. She said the Northern Metropolis Development Bill would resume itssecond reading on Wednesday, after a committee worked overtime to complete itsdeliberations. Edited by Tony Sabine

- Ta Kwu Ling new town to welcome residents by 2035 (2026-11-09 04:43)

Residents and businesses at Ta Kwu Ling could start to move out from mid-2028 to facilitate the redevelopment of the area into a commercial and industrial zone, the government said. The Development Bureau added it would "actively utilise market forces" to speed up the border town's development, which could welcome the first batch of residents from 2035. Under the Northern Metropolis blueprint, the Ta Kwu Ling New Development Area, which spans 1,175 hectares, is to be developed in phases due to its sheer scale. A priority development area has been earmarked adjacent to the Heung Yuen Wai border control point, which began operating in 2020. In a document submitted to the North District Council, the bureau said the priority development area would be expanded by 21 percent to 250 hectares. A university town within the priority development area would now occupy 75 hectares, compared with 30 hectares previously. The bureau said that in response to public views, about seven hectares would be reserved for the Hong Kong Academy for Performing Arts to build a secondary campus. Land earmarked specifically for industries would shrink from 64 to 19 hectares, as some businesses are expected to be incorporated into the university town. As a result of the adjustments, the priority development area is now envisaged to provide 13,000 to 14,000 new flats, down from 17,000 to 19,000. They will house an expected population of 34,000 to 37,000, down from 45,000 to 49,000. The priority development area will provide roughly 27,000 new jobs, compared to the previous estimate of 47,000. "According to the current plan, land acquisition and demolition work will commence in the second quarter of 2028, with land levelling works starting in the fourth quarter of the same year," the bureau said. "The first batch of land [including part of the Ta Kwu Ling University Town campus site] is expected to be completed no earlier than 2030, while the first batch of new residents is expected to move in gradually starting in 2035." The government pledged to provide resettlement, compensation and assistance to residents and businesses, who are expected to move out from the second quarter of 2028. Officials will solicit views from district councillors on expediting the priority development area's transformation at a meeting on Tuesday. Edited by Tony Sabine

- Hong Kong must widen surgical robotics access: FS (2026-11-09 04:32)

Financial Secretary Paul Chan has urged the surgical robotics industry to move beyond proving technical precision and focus on widening access to care, as Hong Kong seeks to become a global hub for medical-device innovation. Speaking at the inaugural Surgical Futures Forum organised by Hong Kong-based surgical robotics company Cornerstone Robotics, Chan said the field had spent 25 years proving its technical capability. The next task, he said, was to broaden access so more surgeons could use robotic systems and more patients could benefit. " Designand cost remain major barriers. Today's mainstream systems are built for the best-resourcedhospitals. Their price, their footprint and their training requirements limit where they can beinstalled and how widely they can be used," he said. "That helps explain why global penetrationremains below five percent. If we believe innovation should serve humanity, progress insurgical robotics must mean more than better technology — it must mean reaching morepatients because behind these barriers are countless people still waiting to benefit." Chan saidthe clearest sign of momentum came in September, when global medtech company Medtronicannounced a strategic investment of about US$700 million in Cornerstone Robotics and secureddistribution rights for Cornerstone's surgical system in selected international markets. Hedescribed the commitment from a global medical-technology leader as a powerful endorsementof Hong Kong's innovation sector. "This partnership shows that technology developed herecan earn the confidence of industry leaders and, through collaboration, reach internationalmarkets," he said, calling it a milestone for both companies and another example of Hong Konginnovation going global. The finance chief also cited a Hong Kong-developed robotic platformnow installed at a leading surgical training centre in Strasbourg, France, as evidence that thecity's medtech sector is ready to train surgeons from around the world. Beyond individualcompanies, he pitched Hong Kong as an end-to-end support system for medical-deviceinnovation, spanning long-term patient capital, biotech fundraising, regulation, clinical data andcross-boundary trials. - Man dies after being hit by bus in North Point (2026-11-09 03:04)

Police said a man in his forties has died after being hit by a bus in North Point on Monday. Officers received a report at around 8am that a Citybus travelling east along King's Road had struck a male pedestrian at the junction with Tin Chong Street. The man was unconscious when taken to Pamela Youde Nethersole Eastern Hospital, where he was later pronounced dead. Some lanes of King's Road heading towards Chai Wan were closed following the accident, but all lanes have since been reopened. Edited by Tony Sabine

- Police flag the use of AI by criminals (2026-11-09 01:55)

Police are warning that more criminals are making use of artificial intelligence to carry out technology-related crimes, leading to a rise in ransomware cases in the first three quarters of this year. The number of these kinds of cases rose by 18 percent year-on-year to 40 during the period. Despite this, there was an overall dip of 12 percent in the number of tech crimes to 21,573 cases, along with a 15 percent drop in total losses that stood at almost HK$3.9 billion. Chief Superintendent Raymond Lam from the Cyber Security and Technology Crime Bureau noted that agentic AI – autonomous AI systems that execute tasks with minimal human supervision – was widely adopted by criminals to path the attack kill chains in order to carry out hack attacks. "They may be used in that kind of cyberattack, like system scanning, vulnerability scanning, penetration, etc," he said. "Indeed, we understand that the use of AI, they obviously increased the speed of attack, the volume, and the intrusiveness, so that the attack will be more effective." Police officials believe criminals have scaled up their reconnaissance and phishingattacks before initiating ransomware attacks using AI. The growing trend highlighted theimportance of Hong Kong police collaborating with both mainland authorities and Interpol, asthe rapid evolution of AI poses a challenge to law enforcement. To meet the challenge, the SARjoined Interpol's first year-long AI-powered cyber operation targeting potential phishing andfraudulent links. Using an AI-analysis engine, created by Hong Kong police, which can analyse awebsite's features, such as its domain and the technical infrastructure, officers can take downor block sites that are deemed risky, before the links reach more people. EnriqueHernandez-Gonzalez, Assistant Director of Cybercrime Operations at Interpol's CybercrimeDirectorate said such intelligence was shared with 47 jurisdictions. As a result, among theroughly 57,000 links that were investigated in the campaign, about 90 percent of them havebecome inaccessible. "Hong Kong has information about malicious domains or victims thatmay be located in other countries," he said. "Using Interpol's channel, we put thatinformation in the outlets of these countries, so they can take action." The second phase of theoperation – featuring the involvement of more than 20 jurisdictions across five continents – waslaunched last month. Edited by Tony Sabine

- New buildings body to recruit about 90 staff: Linn (2026-11-08 08:05)

Secretary for Development Bernadette Linn said the Building Maintenance Support and Services Council plans to recruit around 90 people in the initial phase. The government announced the formation of the new body in the wake of the deadly Wang Fuk Court fire last year, and it aims to help homeowners with building maintenance and renovation works. The council will be set up by the end of the year, offering a paid service to handle tendering and evaluation on their behalf. Speaking on a TV programme on Sunday, Linn said the new staff will include professionals, technical staff, as well as support and administrative personnel. "We want to begin recruitment now so that new hires can be onboard as quickly as possible, and the goal is to have all these staff join in phases and be fully in place between the beginning and the middle of next year." On whether to adopt the two-envelope approach for projects – which assesses the technical aspects and the price separately – the development minister said that could apply to more complex projects. And she doesn't believe it would raise the price tag. "The two-envelope system mainly depends on the weighting which is predetermined, and ultimately, quality is guaranteed, and it won't drive up prices as a result." Linn noted that penalties and spot checks would be strengthened, and will not rule out the possibility of introducing a demerit points system in the future. Separately, she said more than 1,000 training-related applications had been approved under the Construction Innovation and Technology Fund as of September. The government established the fund in 2018, entrusting the Construction Industry Council to finance construction technology training programmes for companies and organisations. Writingin a blog post, Linn said the total funding amount reached HK$50 million, benefiting more than400 companies and organisations. She noted that more than 4,500 people have enrolled incourses offered by the Construction Industry Council over the past three years. Thedevelopment chief stressed her bureau will continue to promote local training and drive the useof technology to raise overall construction productivity. Edited by Edmond Fong

- Three hurt after hit by landing paraglider (2026-11-08 07:29)

Three people were injured on Sunday after being struck by a paraglider that was trying to land at the Ngong Ping campsite at Ma On Shan Country Park. Police said they received a report shortly after 12.30pm from a 42-year-old woman, who said she had been knocked down by a paraglider piloted by a man. Her son and another youngster, aged 14 and 15 respectively, were also hit. Officers said the trio sustained head and back injuries and were airlifted by the Government Flying Service to hospital for treatment. Edited by Edmond Fong

- Govt to boost high-value tourism and Mice (2026-11-08 05:17)

Financial Secretary Paul Chan on Sunday said the government would continue to support the growth of high-value tourism alongside the Meetings, Incentives, Conferences, and Exhibitions (Mice) industry. Writing in his weekly blog, Chan noted that Hong Kong had been buzzing with major events over the past week, including financial summits and international exhibitions. He highlighted the three-day inaugural "Festival of Connoisseurs", which showcased an array of luxury goods such as supercars, yachts and jewellery, noting that it drew over 3,000 visitors from around the world. Citing industry research, Chan said visitors attending international exhibitions spend an average of HK$9,300 per person, which is 70 percent higher than a typical overnight tourist. The research, he said, also estimated that the exhibition industry contributed over HK$50 billion to Hong Kong’s economy in 2024 and created around 67,000 full-time jobs. Chan said the government would continue to vigorously promote mega events across different fields and improve supporting facilities. The Tourism Board, he added, would also continue to work with the industry to tailor more unique experiences and services for high-value visitors. Looking ahead, Chan noted that Hong Kong's capacity for large-scale Mice events would expand by more than 40 percent upon the completion of Phase 2 of AsiaWorld-Expo and the Wan Chai North redevelopment project. - DOJ eyes closer ties with legal sector for global push (2026-11-08 03:57)

Secretary for Justice Paul Lam on Sunday said the government hoped to work closely with the legal sector to help practitioners better navigate the changing international environment and strengthen external exchanges. Speaking on a Commercial Radio programme, Lam stressed that collaboration was a central theme of this year’s Legal Week, which concluded on Friday, demonstrating the government's drive to take the initiative. "The Department of Justice often plays a leading role. We hope that more of our local friends from the legal sector will participate, understand the latest environment, and make new connections — whether from the mainland or overseas. Internally, we must collaborate, but more importantly, we need tocollaborate with partners outside Hong Kong," he said. For Hong Kong to truly live up to itsreputation as an international legal centre, the justice secretary stressed the SAR needs tostrengthen relationships with external legal institutions and engage in more directcommunication. Describing it as “symbolic”, Lam noted that the International Institute forthe Unification of Private Law held its centenary celebration in Hong Kong during Legal Weekwhile concurrently hosting the opening ceremony for its Asia-Pacific Liaison Office. He stressedthat Hong Kong secured the institution's first office outside its seat in Rome in its 100-yearhistory with the country's support. He added that Hong Kong played an important role inhelping the nation promote a fairer, and rules-based international order. Edited by Tony Sabine

- Substandard columns found at MTR site in Tung Chung (2026-11-08 00:35)

The Buildings Department on Saturday said it had found dozens of substandard columns at the MTR station that is currently under construction in Tung Chung West. Around 30 such columns were identified by the registered structural engineers (RSE) working on the project. The department asked that the RSE submit an investigation report and propose remedial measures by the middle of this month. The department will review these submissions, continue to monitor the situation closely, and oversee the necessary corrective works to ensure that all construction meets the relevant safety and quality standards. In response to media questions, the department indicated that it had identified the issues during a routine site inspection and quality audit on the 27th of last month. Upon confirming that two concrete columns were substandard, the department said it immediately instructed the RSE team and the Registered Contractor to conduct a comprehensive investigation and carry out corrective works as soon as possible. The MTR Corporation has since ordered a suspension of relevant construction activities. As part of standard procedures, the RSE’s supervision team carried out further inspections following the progressive removal of the concrete work, uncovering similar defects in additional concrete columns; these findings were reported to the department last Tuesday. The department further stated that, as the temporary supports for the floor slab had not yet been removed, the identified concrete defects posed no risk to the structural integrity of the station. These temporary supports may only be removed once a team of registered structural engineers was satisfied with the relevant works. The department said all such procedures were carried out in accordance with the approved plans while its staff had conducted routine inspections of the site. A preliminary review by the department revealed no evidence of intentional deviation from the approved plans, nor had it found any instances where the follow-up actions taken by the personnel in charge violated relevant codes or regulations. • Health gear firms set to be not left to own devices (2026-11-07 11:07)

The Health Bureau said it is striving to introduce a medical devices bill next year to replace the current voluntary administrative regulatory regime. In a paper submitted to the Legislative Council, it said a dual-track regulatory model covering both pre-market and post-market risk management would be adopted for medical devices. This includes the implementation of a registration system and a licensing system for traders to ensure that medical devices supplied in Hong Kong meet safety and quality standards. The paper states that the proposed registration system would primarily involve classifying different types of medical devices by risk levels. Some general devices and in-vitro diagnostic medical devices must be registered with the Department of Health before they can be launched on the Hong Kong market. These include hypodermic needles, vision-correction contact lenses, urine test strips and self-test blood glucose reagents. Local manufacturers, importers and wholesalers of medical devices must obtain the relevant licences before supplying the products in Hong Kong. The new mechanism will also require traders to report medical device-related incidents, such as incidents that pose a public health threat or may lead to death or a serious deterioration in health, and to take remedial measures that meet the department's requirements. The authorities stressed that the aim is to enhance regulatory oversight and mitigate the consequences of such incidents. The legislative proposals will be discussed in a health services panel meeting on Friday. Edited by Azam Khan

• France's Gehri, Russia's Isakova win HK triathlon leg (2026-11-07 10:22)

France's Nils Serre Gehri produced a dramatic late surge to win the men's individual title at the World Triathlon Cup Hong Kong on Saturday, while Russia's Diana Isakova continued her strong run of form by claiming the women's race. Gehri, who won the U23 title in Pontevedra, Spain, in September, clocked 50 minutes and 14 seconds. He overtook Australia's Callum McClusky right at the finish line to seal the victory, with Spain's David Castro Fajardo rounding out the podium in third. Hong Kong, China's Nicholas Tsang finished 58th in 54 minutes and 44 seconds. In the women's race, Isakova arrived in Hong Kong fresh from a World Cup win in Rome and made it back-to-back victories, finishing in 55 minutes and 39 seconds. Luxembourg's Jeanne Lehair took second, followed by Huang Anqi of the national team. Hilda Choi was the top finisher among Hong Kong triathletes in 37th place, with Cade Wright 39th and Bailee Brown 50th. The roughly 24-kilometre course began along the Central and Wan Chai waterfront, with athletes opening with a 750-metre swim in Victoria Harbour. They then tackled an 18.5-kilometre bike leg past Expo Drive, the International Finance Centre and the Central Piers before closing with a five-kilometre run to the finish line on Lung Wo Road. The mixed team relay is scheduled for Sunday. Edited by Azam Khan

• Three arrested over HK$4m craft beer scam (2026-11-07 10:06)

Two men and a woman have been arrested on suspicion of conspiracy to defraud in connection with an alleged scheme that induced people to invest in craft beer machines. The suspects, aged between 46 and 54, were said to have held the roles of company director, office person-in-charge and investor recruiter, police said. An investigation found that the alleged criminal syndicate began operating last November by luring people into investing in craft beer machines on the promise of high returns. The syndicate are alleged to have claimed that the machines would be rented out on the mainland and that the annual return rate would reach 60 percent, according to police. Officers said the syndicate held investment seminars and took prospective investors to its office to sample beer. It would initially pay returns to investors but later stopped. Police said the syndicate had no operations in Hong Kong and that some of the invested funds were found to have been transferred to personal accounts. So far, police have contacted six victims whose losses amounted to more than HK$4 million. Edited by Azam Khan

- Govt rebuts ten-nation statement on Wong case (2026-11-07 09:49)

The government on Saturday expressed strong dissatisfaction with and firm opposition to a joint statement by ten countries on the sentencing of Joshua Wong for conspiracy to commit collusion, saying it distorted facts and smeared the SAR. A government spokesman said the statement by the United States, the United Kingdom, France, Germany, Japan, Italy, Australia, Canada, the Netherlands and New Zealand disregarded facts, interfered with the SAR's independent judicial power, and urged the countries to stop interfering in Hong Kong matters, which are purely China's internal affairs. Wong pleaded guilty to conspiracy to collude with foreign countries or external elements to endanger national security, and the court sentenced him independently on the evidence, the spokesperson said. "Attempting to distort criminal judgments handed down in accordance with the law into actions targeting 'political expression' or 'political participation' is purely political manipulation deliberately intended to confuse the public and distort right and wrong," the spokesman said. "Hong Kong is a society underpinned by the rule of law. The HKSAR Government has been consistently fulfilling its constitutional duty to safeguard national security in accordance with the law, upholding the principles that laws must be observed and strictly enforced to bring offenders to account." - Proxy votes loom large in building management law fix (2026-11-07 08:29)

Secretary for Home and Youth Affairs Alice Mak said Hong Kong would strengthen provisions for proxy-vote checks and continue to study a cap on such votes following the end of a second round of consultations on Building-Management Ordinance amendments. The public consultation, she said on Saturday, drew 500 responses, with more than half expressing reservations about a proposed cap on proxy votes. "If we set a cap of 20, then when proxy votes are submitted to an owners' corporation and it receives 22, how can it determine which is the 21st or 22nd? How should the verification be carried out at submission?" Mak said. "Should it be counted by the time of its submission to the management office or by the time the person signed the proxy form? So there are some practical difficulties, and we understand this." Mak said the government would continue to study the cap and related issues, including who could be appointed as a proxy, and would explore electronic proxy appointments as a way toovercome operational difficulties. "For the whole proxy-vote system, we must ensure, in thedirection of our amendments, the system is not abused and that proxy votes cannot be forged,"she said. "We need to make sure the proxy appointment is genuine and that the operation isworkable on the ground level. It has to operate practically without difficulties to avoid potentialdisputes." Mak went on to say that a paper had already been submitted to the LegislativeCouncil, and that the matter would be discussed next week. Edited by Azam Khan

- Lawmakers call for cancel culture to hit bid-riggers (2026-11-07 08:23)

Lawmakers on Saturday voiced hope that a newly established joint task force can change the culture of the building maintenance and renovation industry by actively weeding out bad apples. They were speaking following an announcement on Friday that 28 people had been arrested in an operation against a suspected triad-linked bid-rigging syndicate in the sector. It was the first operation by a joint task force – made up of police, the ICAC and the Competition Commission – that was set up following the release of the report by an independent committee probing last November's deadly fire at Wang Fuk Court in Tai Po. Speaking on a radio programme, DAB lawmaker Chan Hok-fung said the new joint task force should not be targeting bid-rigging on a case-by-case basis. “I think it’s only at the source that the problem can truly be solved,” he said. “If the government doesn’t get involved, doesn’t intervene heavily and doesn’t reverse this distorted way the market operates, the problem can’t be solved." Lam Chun-sing, who chairs the Federation of Hong Kong and Kowloon Labour Unions, called for firms convicted of bribery or competition offences to be struck off contractors' lists. “What some contractors fear most isn’t a fine – it’s not being allowed to take on work in the future,” he said. - John Lee calls on youth to be curious and courageous (2026-11-07 07:25)

Chief Executive John Lee on Saturday urged young people to be curious and courageous as Hong Kong hosts the third Youth Development Summit. In a video speech for the summit, themed "Pioneering New Horizons, Venturing into the Future", in Wan Chai, he said that when young people are empowered, communities are strengthened and the world moves forward. Under the the territory's first five-year plan, Lee said, Hong Kong will enhance youth development opportunities, nurturing a new generation to cultivate affection for the country and Hong Kong, a global perspective, and an ambitious and positive mindset. "We are expanding international exposure through exchanges, internships, and learning experiences," he said. "Working with our schools, businesses and community partners, we are cultivating an environment where young people can unleash their potential, thrive and shine on the global stage." For his part, Chief Secretary Eric Chan said he was confident government measures would help Hong Kong's young people serve the needs of the economy, the community and the country. "That includes participating in the development of the Guangdong-Hong Kong-Macao Greater Bay Area, as well as the Belt and Road Initiative," he said. "We will continue to deepen patriotic education for young people while helping them broaden their international horizons."

- US enterprises 'surprise' in latest HK strategic batch (2026-11-07 05:08)

The United States is the largest source of overseas firms in Hong Kong's latest batch of companies welcomed by the Office for Attracting Strategic Enterprises (Oases). Last month, Oases welcomed 18 enterprise partners in its seventh batch, bringing the cumulative number of strategic enterprises attracted to Hong Kong to 142. "In terms of overseas enterprises, you may be a bit surprised, but the United States has the largest number; of course there is also Europe," said Oases director-general Peter Yan on an RTHK radio programme on Saturday. "This time I am also very happy that for the first time we have a Korean enterprise coming to Hong Kong and also a Japanese enterprise coming to Hong Kong as strategic enterprises." On the mainland side, Yan said the enterprises came from various cities such as Beijing, Shanghai and Shenzhen. " This time we also explored more other cities that are quite outstanding, especially in advanced manufacturing and new energy; we are also attracting them," he said. "In medical technology, other cities are also developing quite well – for example, Hangzhou in AI, and Nanjing and Suzhou." Yan said artificial intelligence and life and health technology are two relatively large sectors represented in the batch, with each accounting for about 30 percent of the total, while fintech and new energy each accounted for more than 10 percent. The 142 strategic enterprises that have settled in Hong Kong, he enumerated, have committed to a total investment of HK$84 billion and will create about 26,700 high-end jobs. His office has been monitoring and following up on the companies' development, and both capital investment and job creation have now exceeded their targets. Looking at the first six batches of strategic enterprises, Yan said capital investment has exceeded pledged figures by about 30 percent. He added that Oases carefully selects strategic enterprises, gaining an in-depth understanding of about 20 to 30 percent of the companies it contacts and helping them draw up development plans for Hong Kong. Typically, the office contacts companies several months before they settle in the city and follows up for more than a year, discussing their first concrete landing project and matching them with policies or stakeholders such as universities, investors and the business sector to help ensure a tangible industrial contribution. - Colder weather 'may worsen flu risks for children' (2026-11-07 05:01)

A paediatric infectious diseases expert warned on Saturday that colder weather could prolong the current flu season and lead to more critical cases in children. Mike Kwan, president of the Asian Society for Paediatric Infectious Diseases, said that if infection numbers stay high, critical cases will rise in tandem. "Since the weather is going to get more cold, and also we are going into the winter season, I really worry that the current flu season will merge with the winter flu season," he said. "So then you experience a very, very long period of the flu infection. And subsequently... [I am] really worried that there will be more paediatric critical cases or even mortality." Kwan urged parents whose children had yet to receive this season's influenza vaccine to get them vaccinated as soon as possible. Edited by Robert Kemp

- 28 nabbed in first task force raid against bid-rigging (2026-11-06 11:18)

Authorities said on Friday that 28 people were arrested in an operation against a suspected triad-linked bid-rigging syndicate targeting building maintenance and renovation projects. Secretary for Security Chris Tang said it was the first operation by the joint task force made up of police, the ICAC and the Competition Commission, which was set up after the Wang Fuk Court fire last year. Tang said the syndicate was looking to cash in before the government's anti-bid-rigging policies takes effect. Under pretexts such as fluctuating material prices and the urgent need to start works, it tried to get homeowners to sign contracts quickly, so its preferred engineering consultants and contractors would be selected in a bid to rake in huge profits at the last minute, he said. "The syndicate involved at least 20 buildings or estates, including 12 that have already awarded the contract and eight that have yet to award the contract," the security minister told reporters. "The awarded sum is about HK$100 million and the to-be-awarded amount is also about HK$100 million." Officials will contact the owners' corporations of the affected estates to offer assistance. Those arrested include directors and staff from a property management company, six contractors and 10 consultancy firms, along with one member of an owners' corporation. Several arrestees, Tang said, were suspected to have triad affiliations. They were arrested for offences including deception, forgery, conspiracy to defraud and conspiracy to offer an advantage to an agent, among others. Separately, police smashed seven illegal premises suspected to be controlled by triads across the city and arrested 38 people. Tang said the syndicate allegedly funnelled profits from bid-rigging to illegal gambling dens and vice establishments. He added a 24-hour hotline and a reward scheme have been set up to encourage the public to report suspected bid-rigging, with all information kept strictly confidential. Edited by Edmond Fong

- 'Unlimited land searches raise privacy concerns' (2026-11-06 09:07)

A development official on Friday said a lack of restrictions for land record searches may lead to privacy concerns, prompting the authorities to adjust the mechanism. Her remarks came after the government proposed legislative amendments, saying land record searches must meet one of nine specified purposes. Speaking to lawmakers, Permanent Secretary for Development of Planning and Lands Doris Ho said there should be room for the media to carry out investigativereporting by allowing the search in the public interest, including the reporting of large-scaleunauthorised building works. “We believe that there should be a mechanism – a not toodifficult one – for the media to carry out reporting that serves public interest,” she said. “Wewant to have this type of reporting. Therefore, although an application and some informationwill be required in the future… we believe the chance of approval is very high.” Ho added thatalthough there is no appeal mechanism, if an application is rejected, the applicant could submitgrounds that were not previously provided for authorities to reconsider. Authorities are alsolooking at the introduction of a mechanism to inform home owners whose properties are beingsearched, she said. Edited by Aaron Tam

- Record 400-plus HK firms join Shanghai import expo (2026-11-06 08:04)

A record high of more than 400 Hong Kong businesses are taking part in the China International Import Expo in Shanghai hoping to use the event as a launchpad for entry into the mainland market. Among the first-time exhibitors is a Hong Kong accounting firm, which has seen a 30-percent surge over the past year in mainland clients seeking to expand overseas. Man Law, CEO of the firm's greater China division, told RTHK that venturing abroad was no longer just a trend, but a practical necessity for managing risks and driving growth. The expo, he said, is an ideal stage to highlight Hong Kong's role as a springboard for international growth, particularly through tax incentives. "Suppose you have set up an office and hired staff in Hong Kong," Law said. "When expanding into Southeast Asia or investing in other foreign markets, you can take advantage of the double taxation avoidance agreements signed between Hong Kong and many countries. "At their peak, tax savings could exceed 50 percent." Another first-time exhibitor is a craft brewery that is working up a thirst at the expo for its award-winning, Hong Kong-made beer. The brewery's marketing director said the brand aims to tap the mainland market, confident that its craft beers will be competitive as many mainland consumers have a strong appetite for Hong Kong products. The event has also drawn local academic institutions, including the Hong Kong Polytechnic University. PolyU vice-president Zheng Zijian said the university, which has established 12 research institutes on the mainland over the past three years for incubation programmes, has brought innovation projects such as robots and food technology to the expo. The institution, he stressed, has benefited from the mainland's comprehensive domestic industrial chain and robust support from local governments. “Our practice over the past few years is to take the path of deep integration with the mainland and contribute to integration with the country's talent, science and technology, and education,” Zheng said. - Police honour fallen officer Chu at memorial (2026-11-06 07:29)

Police paid tribute to senior police constable Chu Chun-kwok, who died in September, at the Force Remembrance Day ceremony on Friday. Chu was paralysed after he was attacked while on duty in 2005 and passed away this year at the age of 52. The ceremony was led by police commissioner Joe Chow, who joined police representatives in honouring full-time and auxiliary officers killed in the line of duty. In his address, Chow said the fallen officers had given theirlives for Hong Kong’ s safety and stability. Their example, he added, places a responsibility oncurrent officers to carry on the values and work they stood for. Turning to Chu, Chow said hisdeath, along with the sacrifices of other fallen officers, showed a firm commitment to protectingthe public and their property and to moving the force forward. He described their dedication asa guide for the force as it seeks to improve and meet future challenges. Chow also said thesacrifices of those who came before had created a strong foundation for both the force andsociety, and urged officers to remain united and committed to serving the community. Theceremony included the sounding of the "Last Post" and a two-minute silence. Wreaths were laidby Chow, police commandant Johnny Leung and representatives of police formations andassociations before the Books of Remembrance, which list the names of fallen officers. - Choi to seek additional funding for university towns (2026-11-06 06:47)

Secretary for Education Christine Choi said on Friday that her bureau would seek additional funding for the development of university towns at the Northern Metropolis. In an interview with a local news outlet, she said universities would require much more funding from the financial secretary than the HK$10 billion loan set aside for them to build campuses there. However, she also pointed out that the government had to take into consideration a need to prioritise public funding allocations. Given that the development at the three university towns – located in San Tin, Hung Shui Kiu and Ta Kwu Ling – would be carried out in phases, Choi said she believed institutions would not need to go heavily into debt in the process. The government has been taking applications for the three sites slated for the Hung Shui Kiu University Town, which spans around 26 hectares in total, since September. Choi said institutions need not to be in a hurry to compete for the sites, as they only account for less than 10 percent of the 300-hectare Northern Metropolis university town area. On whether leading universities from outside the SAR would also participate in the project, Choi said she believed they would be inclined to collaborate with local institutions in setting up joint laboratories and research centres, as they have to take into consideration their finances and the geopolitical situation. At a Legislative Council panel meeting, Choi said the SAR’ s university town plan is very different from the ones on the mainland by having compounding advantages that place Hong Kong in a unique position. For instance, she said, the city is highly international and diversified. “Our institutions have long enjoyed a globally renowned reputation in academic and research fields," Choi said. "Also, in terms of our ability to attract top talent as well as in aspects such as policies and the legal system, Hong Kong also has unique advantages.” Choi added that Hong Kong would also complement other university towns on the mainland. - Exchange Fund makes HK$18.6bn as tough quarter looms (2026-11-06 06:06)

The Hong Kong Monetary Authority said on Friday it chalked up an income of HK$18.6 billion from Exchange Fund investments in the third quarter as its chief executive warned of uncertainties in the fourth quarter. Gains from investments in Hong Kong stocks came in at

HK$9.1 billion while the return from bond investments only amounted to HK$300 million.Investments in other equities contributed HK$1.5 billion while foreign exchange investmentbrought HK$7.7 billion. The authority said total investment income in the first three quarters ofthis year amounted to HK$171.9 billion. Speaking after attending a meeting of the LegislativeCouncil’s financial affairs panel, authority chief executive Eddie Yue said the fund'sperformance would continue to fluctuate this quarter, describing it as a “difficult quarter withuncertainties”. The uncertainties run the gamut from Middle East tensions, financial conditionsin major markets, to developments on the artificial intelligence front. “The US midtermelection results have drawn market attention to whether the AI build-out and data-centreconstruction will slow down, as many states appear to be resistant to it,” Yue pointed out.“This also contributed to the volatility in the stock market [on Thursday night].” However, Yueemphasised that the Exchange Fund is a long-term venture and that people should look at itslong-term returns rather than focus on short-term results. The authority, he also stressed, hasbeen maintaining a diversified allocation of assets to make the portfolio more defensive. Editedby Aaron Tam

- Privacy chief backs tighter land-search rules (2026-11-06 04:01)

Privacy commissioner Ada Chung expressed support on Friday for government moves to tighten land record search arrangements, while raising concerns that misuse of land registry data may be getting worse. Her comments come as the government tabled eight pieces of subsidiary legislation in the Legislative Council for the changes. Under the new arrangements, land searches must meet one of nine specified purposes. Speaking on RTHK, Chung said the purposes – which could be part of property deals and valuations – had to be concrete and clear so searchers would stick to declarations of their intended use of the data and not stray into potentially misusing it. She said her office had received 20 complaints in five years about alleged misuse of land registry data, which included instances where owners were doxxed on social media, and the sending of promotional mail. Six complaints came this year alone, Chung pointed out. "We've seen cases where land registry data was used for ... other purposes such as cyberbullying and doxxing. Not a single case of that kind should happen, and we've already had six this year, so the trend is worsening," she said. Chung said the new rules on land searches make the system clearer, better protect owners' privacy, and help people to avoid breaking the law. She noted that the Personal Data (Privacy) Ordinance's exemption for journalistic activities also requires a public-interest basis, matching the purpose of the new arrangements. Edited by Aaron Tam

- HK can help 'bend the curve' on rising drug costs: FS (2026-11-06 03:41)

Financial Secretary Paul Chan on Friday said Hong Kong can play a key role in reversing the rising cost of bringing new medicines to patients, as he opened the third International Bio-Computing Innovation Summit in the SAR. In his opening speech, Chan drew on two contrasting "laws" to frame the challenge facing the life sciences industry. Moore's Law describes how the cost of computing power has gone down – while medicine is going down the opposite path. For some seven decades, he said, the cost of bringing a new drug to patients roughly doubled every nine years, a phenomenon known as Eroom's Law. "Behind that rising curve are promising treatments that were never able to secure funding, and patients waiting for better medical options," Chan said. "Eroom's Law describes the past. It needs not dictate the future." Chan identified three forces that could help "bend the curve", and said Hong Kong could contribute to each. The first is the power of computing to transform biological research, he said, as gene sequencing becomes cheaper and AI allows scientists not only to read the code of life, but to model and "write" it – designing molecules, antibodies and enzymes rather than relying on laboratory trial and error. He noted that a drug discovered by generative AI entered phase three clinical trials this year, and that the company behind it is listed in Hong Kong. Regulators, he added, are beginning to accept evidence from computer models and alternatives to animal testing. The second force, Chan said, is the changing geography of drug innovation. " China now is no longer just a market for global pharmaceutical companies. It has become an indispensable part of their global research and development network," he said, noting that overseas licensing deals for innovative drugs from China reached nearly US$140 billion in total value last year, almost 10 times the level in 2021. The third force is capital – "not just how much we invest, but how well we put it to work," he said. He highlighted the power of the city's capital markets, noting Hong Kong has become the world's second-largest fundraising centre for biotechnology since listing reforms for pre-revenue biotech firms in 2018. Chan said Hong Kong's role is increasingly clear: to bring models, patients, markets and capital together, and reduce the time and cost of bringing new treatments to market. He pointed to the establishment of the Hong Kong Centre for Medical Products Regulation, efforts in Hetao to make it easier for data and biosamples to move across the boundary, the new Life and Health Technology Research Institute, and a third medical school being built with HKUST. "If this is the decade in which we finally bend that curve, let Hong Kong play a part in making it happen," he said. Edited by Aaron Tam

- GBA offers limitless opportunities for laywers: Lam (2026-11-06 03:11)

Secretary for Justice Paul Lam has called on legal practitioners from the two SARs to obtain Greater Bay Area (GBA) practice qualifications to tap into the area's limitless opportunities. The GBA lawyers' scheme – which allows those qualified to practice in nine mainland cities – wasregularised in September after a six-year pilot run. Speaking at the Second Guangdong-HongKong-Macao Greater Bay Area Lawyers Forum that was held during the Legal Week on Friday,Lam said more than 700 legal practitioners from Hong Kong and Macao have so far obtainedthe qualification. "The Greater Bay Area has the characteristic of 'one country, two systemsand three jurisdictions'," he said. "Greater Bay Area lawyers with dual practice qualificationswill serve as pioneers." Lam noted that the GBA is among the areas with the highest degree ofopenness and strongest economic vitality in the country. Hong Kong, he said, will step up thecloser interface of rules and laws on the safeguards of the rule of law in the GBA, as laid out inits inaugural five-year plan. With more than 900 participants attending the event at theConvention and Exhibition Centre in Wan Chai in-person or online, the minister urged them totake the chance to understand the latest GBA developments, grasp new opportunities andexpand into new fields. - Police to deploy facial recognition on CCTV networks (2026-11-06 00:51)

Police said facial recognition technology will be rolled out across its CCTV network this month to assist in criminal searches and locate high-risk missing persons, with some of the captured data stored for up to 180 days. Officers said they have so far installed around 10,000 cameras under the SmartView initiative, alongside connections to a further 10,000 from other government departments and public organisations. Covered locations include, among others, Kai Tak Sports Park, Hong Kong International Airport, cross-harbour tunnels, MTR stations and public housing estates. Superintendent Raymond Cheng said the facial recognition feature can be activated anytime on all police cameras, as well as third-party feeds integrated into the SmartView system. However, he explained that the feature will only be triggered during active criminal searches or to locate high-risk missing persons, to save resources. "For the 24 hours analysis, not all of them can be used at the same time because of the resources," Cheng said. "But if we need to use, we can spend the resources on particular CCTV, and of course it can be used around the clock." In separate pilot tests, police said the facial recognition technology has already helped them arrest a robbery suspect and locate an elderly man with dementia within 1.5 hours of being reported missing. Officers said CCTV footage will only be kept for a maximum of 31 days. However, photos of individuals captured by the facial recognition technology, along with metadata such as location, date, time, and facial characteristics, will be retained for 180 days. Meanwhile, police revealed that at least four shopping malls have agreed to connect their CCTV feeds to the police network. RTHK understands these include Tuen Mun Town Plaza, Olympian City, Kwai Chung Shopping Centre, and Sierra Life in Fanling. Cheng said malls that have installed CCTV cameras are required by law to display signs warning people that recording is in progress. However, the superindendent noted the Department of Justice (DOJ) advised that it should be voluntary for malls to disclose whether their CCTV feeds are connected to the police network. "We will follow the advice from the DOJ to encourage shopping malls or the organisations to post our notice to announce that our system is connected with their CCTV," Cheng added. Police have been installing cameras in public places with high crime rates and heavy pedestrian flow since 2024, aiming to reach a target of 60,000 cameras by 2028 to coverthe entire city. An additional 6,500 cameras will be installed in the developing NorthernMetropolis after 2028, bringing the total number of public surveillance cameras to around66,500 in 2031. Since the project began, the force said its CCTV network has helped solve nearly2,200 criminal cases, including murder, robbery, and arson, leading to more than 2,800 arrests.Edited by Aaron Tam

- Tang condemns external smearing over Wong sentence (2026-11-05 10:13)

Secretary for Security Chris Tang strongly condemned on Thursday attacks by external forces following the sentencing of former activist Joshua Wong, who was imprisoned for 10 years after pleading guilty to conspiring with foreign countries or external elements to endanger national security. Tang said the court, in passing sentence on Wong, found that he, Nathan Law, who has absconded, and others had continued to collude with foreign officials and outlets in calling for sanctions and hostile measures against the nation, Hong Kong and their officials. He reiterated that Wong was sentenced under fair and open judicial proceedings, showing that the SAR abides by the rule of law. "Those launching attacks against us are exactly the same external forces that Wong and Law attempted to collude... They must be strongly condemned, and Hong Kong citizens must recognise and acknowledge that clearly," Tang said. Speaking outside the High Court earlier on Thursday, Steve Li, chief superintendent of the police's national security department, said Wong had taken part in social movements from a young age and committed various offences in adulthood. Li said he hoped Wong would reflect on his wrongdoings. "I sincerely hope that for the rest of his time in prison, apart from reflecting on the wrongdoings he has done to the country and to the Hong Kong SAR, he must seize the opportunity to learn how to respect the law and properly understand his own country," he said. - DOJ launches HK$20,000 lawtech funding scheme (2026-11-05 09:48)

The Department of Justice has launched a funding scheme aimed at helping small and medium-sized law firms and newly qualified barristers adopt legal technology. The Funding Scheme for LawTech Solution Subscription, managed by the Law Society of Hong Kong and the Hong Kong Bar Association, will provide eligible applicants with up to HK$20,000 for a one-year subscription to designated legal technology services. The list covers services from 14 local, mainland and overseas providers, spanning legal research, document drafting, workflow management and hearing support. Eligible applicants are sole practitioners, Hong Kong law firms with five or fewer partners, and barristers with no more than seven years of call. Speaking to reporters at Hong Kong Legal Week on Thursday, Deputy Secretary for Justice Horace Cheungsaid the pilot scheme would ease the financial burden on applicants seeking to improve theirability to adopt lawtech services. "We hope that we can use such kind of financial incentive toencourage them to use the lawtech tools in their practice and we believe that after this pilotscheme, they will know how good the legal tool can help them in their practice," he said. " Iwould say that is only the beginning. Certainly we will monitor the progress of the pilot schemeand see what we can do further for the legal sector in the years ahead." Cheung also said theDepartment of Justice would release guidance notes on the application of technology in legalpractice. The notes, he said, are intended to give the legal profession principles to consider andpractical advice on adopting legal technology, helping practitioners guard against potential riskswhile remaining mindful of their ongoing professional responsibilities. Meanwhile, José-AntonioMaurellet, chairman of the Hong Kong Bar Association, said the scheme was timely andfar-sighted and would benefit about 500 members. He believes it would encourage youngermembers to invest more time and resources in training and to stay competitive. Roden Tong,president of the Law Society of Hong Kong, for his part, said the Department of Justice hadintroduced the scheme for a second time, adding that the support helped the legal professionmake better use of technology and improve efficiency. The application deadline is January 29.Edited by Tony Sabine

- HK 'to widen trade reach to help nation go global' (2026-11-05 08:29)

Chief Executive John Lee on Thursday said Hong Kong would continue to expand its international trade network to better contribute to the country's overall development. Speaking at the Hong Kong sub-forum of the Hongqiao International Economic Forum in Shanghai, he noted the event was the first major conference held by the SAR since the unveiling of its first-ever five-year plan in September. The conference, Lee said, allowed experts and industry leaders from both the mainland and Hong Kong to gather and explore how the city could leverage its unique position under "One Country, Two Systems" and integrate into national development. One key focus area is trade, he said. “Hong Kong has become the fifth-largest merchandise trading entity in the world, having signed free-trade agreements with 21 economies and investment agreements with 34 economies," Lee said. "The SAR government will continue to expand its international economic and trade network to play a greater role in the country’s high-standard opening up." The world, Lee pointed out, is experiencing a once-in-a-century transformation, which is happening alongside a global supply chain restructuring and rapid technological advancement. He stressed that Hong Kong must proactively plan for its future and implement a forward-looking strategic plan with a calm and measured approach. Another key focus area, Lee said, is finance. Describing it as Hong Kong’s fundamental and greatest area of strength, he stressed that the SAR must consolidate its role as an international financial centre. He added that Hong Kong would strengthen its position as the world's largest offshore renminbi hub to expand the global use of the currency and actively build a commodity and gold trading ecosystem. Lee also noted that Hong Kong would proactively align with national scientific research and industrial strategies, accelerate its investment in science and technology, and help mainland enterprises expand overseas throughits GoGlobal Task Force. Later, Lee toured various booths hosted by Hong Kong enterprises andinstitutions taking part in the China International Import Expo, which is being held concurrentlywith the forum. He listened to a briefing by Hong Kong Polytechnic University representatives,and at one booth, tasted traditional sweetheart cakes — also known as wife cakes. Arepresentative told the chief executive that the pastries have been a huge hit at high-speed railstations on the mainland, adding that they have revamped their packaging to feature HongKong elements on the design, such as trams, to appeal to younger generations. Lee also visiteda craft beer booth to try a brew infused with the flavour of salty-lemon 7Up — an iconic HongKong cha chaan teng drink that mixes 7Up with salted preserved lemon. A representative at thebooth told him that Hong Kong enjoys a major advantage in sourcing raw ingredients thanks tobeing a highly international city. Lee said Hong Kong could host its own beer festival in thefuture, encouraging the business to keep growing and build itself into a premier local brand forsuch events. Frederick Ma, chairman of the Hong Kong Trade Development Council, said thecouncil led a delegation of more than 70 Hong Kong enterprises at this year's expo, with recordsset in both the number of participating exhibitors and the amount of exhibition space used._____ Last updated: 2026-11-05 HKT 17:10 Edited by Tony Sabine

- Wong undermined HK's prosperity and stability: CE (2026-11-05 08:09)

Chief Executive John Lee on Thursday said Joshua Wong was one of the “primary culprits responsible for undermining Hong Kong’s prosperity and stability” after he was jailed for 10 years for conspiracy to collude with foreign countries or external elements to endanger national security. In a statement, Lee said Wong has repeatedly broken the law over the years, adding that before the implementation of the National Security Law (NSL) Wong, Nathan Law and others persistently colluded with foreign countries and tried to get them to impose sanctions against China and the SAR. Lee went on to say that after the NSL took effect, Wong, Law and their accomplices “showed no repentance and continued to act as agents of foreign countries and external forces, wantonly persisting in conspiring to collude with foreign countries or external forces to endanger national security, in a vain attempt to exert pressure on the Central Authorities and the HKSAR Government through external forces, betraying Hong Kong while remaining incorrigible". Meanwhile, a government spokesman said Wong's sentence " completely shattered the illusion of individuals endangering national security that they could escape liability under the guise of so-called 'international battlefront' or 'international advocacy', and demonstrated to the international community the HKSAR's firm determination to safeguard national security". about 60 years old, was found unconscious with head injuries and was pronounced dead at thescene. Edited by Tony Sabine

• Joshua Wong jailed 10 years for foreign collusion (2026-11-05 04:13)

Former activist Joshua Wong was on Thursday jailed for 10 years after pleading guilty to conspiracy to collude with foreign countries or external elements to endanger national security. High Court Judge William Tam found the offence was of a “grave nature” under the National Security Law. The court said Wong and his affiliates, including Nathan Law, persisted after the NSL took effect in calling for foreign sanctions, blockade or other hostile measures against the People's Republic of China, the Hong Kong SAR and their officials. They deliberately adapted roles so overseas allies made blatant calls for such sanctions, while Wong, remaining in Hong Kong, published and bolstered the calls. Judge Tam took a starting point of 13 years, then cut three years for the guilty plea and mitigation, leaving 10 years – the statutory minimum for a grave offence. Two months and two days of the new term will run concurrently with the sentence Wong is already serving for another subversion case. Speaking to reporters outside the High Court, Steve Li, Chief Superintendent of the police's National Security Department, said that Wong took part in social movements from a young age and committed various offences as an adult. Li said he hopes Wong will reflect on his wrongdoings. "I sincerely hope that for the rest of his time in prison, apart from reflecting on the wrongdoings he has done to the country and to the Hong Kong SAR, he must seize the opportunity to learn how to respect the law and properly understand his own country," he said. • HK 'is largest cross-boundary wealth management hub' (2026-11-05 03:59)

Financial Secretary Paul Chan on Thursday said Hong Kong’s wealth management sector is growing strongly and is well positioned to capture a fair share of business emanating from shifting global affluence. In a keynote speech at the Wealth Management Summit, he pointed to a survey in July by the Securities and Futures Commission that showed assets under management jumped 20 percent to more than HK$42 trillion. The city, Chan said, is now the largest cross-boundary wealth management centre in the world. A survey by summit organiser Private Wealth Management Association offered a similarly encouraging picture, as it found 77 percent of member firms reported stronger demand to open accounts or book client assets in Hong Kong and that 94 percent were moderately or highly optimistic about the city's prospects over the next five years. Chan said sentiment at this week’s Global Financial Leaders’ Investment Summit, which drew some 280 international leaders from the sector, including around 120 chairmen or chief executives, was "decidedly positive", with some planning to increase investment and headcount in the city. International capital was showing fresh confidence in Hong Kong, he said, with it being reinforced by policy measures to boost private wealth management. "Our tax concession for family-owned investment vehicles is now well established and Hong Kong is home to over 3,300 single-family offices, up 25 percent in just two years," he said at the summit. "The New Capital Investment Entrant Scheme has received some 4,300 applications, representing an expected investment of HK$150 billion, and we have introduced legislation to further enhance the preferential tax regimes for funds, single-familyoffices and carry interest, which we aim to pass by the end of this year." Chan said higher ratesand uncertainty were redrawing the map for capital flows, with cash earning a return again andinvestors diversifying across markets and currencies. Hong Kong is a clear beneficiary, he said,noting that deposits rose 7.7 percent to HK$20.9 trillion in the first nine months of this year.Initial public offerings raised, Chan pointed out, a record HK$388 billion and capital is arrivingfrom the United States and Europe, as well as the mainland, Southeast Asia, Central Asia andthe Middle East. He also pointed to technology and AI as a growing source of wealth: tech isnow the largest source of wealth among the world's richest tycoons, and mainland billionairefortunes rose over 20 percent to US$1.8 trillion last year. Hong Kong is capturing it at source –116 A- and H-share listings in the first three quarters accounted for about 70 percent of fundsraised, over half of which were in AI, semiconductors and robotics, with some 500 applicationsin the pipeline.
