Executive Summary

Japan has demonstrated a significant acceleration in strengthening its defense capabilities and strategic posture from April 27 to May 04, 2026. Key developments include the initiation of discussions to revise three crucial security documents, aiming for a drastic reinforcement of the Self-Defense Forces and an increased defense budget. Concurrently, Japan has substantially relaxed its defense export restrictions, enabling the sale of lethal weaponry to allied nations, marking a historic shift in its post-war pacifist stance. The nation also fully participated in the large-scale Balikatan exercises in the Philippines, deploying combat troops for the first time since World War II, alongside heightened Chinese military activities in the East China Sea and Taiwan Strait. Furthermore, Japan is actively bolstering its cybersecurity defenses with the implementation of the Active Cyber Defense Act, amidst a surge in state-sponsored cyberattacks.

Key Security Developments

- Defense Policy and Strategic Document Revision

On April 27, 2026, the Japanese government, led by Prime Minister Sanae Takaichi, commenced discussions on revising its three key security documents: the National Security Strategy, National Defense Strategy, and Defense Buildup Program. This initiative aims to fundamentally strengthen Japan's defense capabilities, increase the defense budget, and prepare for "new ways of warfare" utilizing artificial intelligence and other advanced technologies. The revisions are expected to be approved by year-end, signaling a proactive approach to an increasingly severe security environment.

- Relaxation of Defense Export Restrictions

Effective April 21, 2026, Japan significantly eased its "Three Principles on Transfer of Defense Equipment and Technology," lifting a near-total ban on lethal weaponry exports. This landmark decision allows Japanese firms to supply lethal weapons to 17 countries with existing defense cooperation agreements, with the goal of bolstering deterrence, strengthening the domestic defense-industrial base, and fostering economic growth. This move has been welcomed by the U.S. and the Philippines but drew strong condemnation from Beijing, which views it as a step towards "new militarism."

- Full Participation in Balikatan Exercises

From April 27, 2026, Japan fully participated in the Balikatan joint military exercises with the Philippines and the United States, deploying approximately 1,400 personnel, including combat troops, a ShinMaywa US-2 amphibious aircraft, the helicopter destroyer JS Ise, and Type 88 missiles. This marks the first time Japan has sent combat troops to Philippine soil since World War II, with drills near Oyster Bay in Palawan focusing on casualty evacuation, maritime security, integrated air defense, and drone warfare.

- Ground Self-Defense Force (GSDF) in Salaknib Drills

Japan's Ground Self-Defense Force (GSDF) participated for the first time in the Salaknib drills, a U.S.-Philippines military exercise, which commenced in phases from April 6-17 and continues into May-June 2026. Approximately 420 GSDF personnel joined the exercises at the Ramon Magsaysay Base in Nueva Ecija Province, Philippines, focusing on land-sea integrated territorial defense operations.

- Heightened Chinese Maritime and Air Activities

As of April 23, 2026, Japan reported spotting 93 Chinese vessels in its contiguous zone, with four entering its territorial sea. On April 18, a Chinese marine research ship was observed extending a wire-like object into Japan's Exclusive Economic Zone (EEZ) near the disputed Senkaku/Diaoyu Islands. Chinese air and naval forces also conducted "joint combat readiness patrols" in the East China Sea, and Chinese naval vessels transited sensitive waterways near Japan's southwestern islands.

- Japanese Naval Transit of Taiwan Strait

On April 17, 2026, a Japanese naval ship transited the Taiwan Strait, a move that Beijing condemned as "flexing its military muscle." This action underscores Japan's increasing willingness to assert its presence in strategically sensitive waterways amidst rising regional tensions.

- Downgrading of Diplomatic Relations with China

Japan's 2026 Diplomatic Bluebook, released around April 10, downgraded its characterization of relations with China, describing it as merely "an important neighbor" rather than "one of its most important" relationships. This shift reflects Tokyo's growing unease with sustained strategic, economic, and military tensions, including China's restrictions on critical minerals and military assertiveness.

- Implementation of Active Cyber Defense Act

The Active Cyber Defense Act, which came into effect in 2026, empowers Japanese authorities to undertake "active" defense measures against cyberattacks. This includes monitoring communications data for threat detection, counter-accessing sources of cyberattacks, and neutralizing malicious software. From October 1, 2026, the Self-Defense Force will be authorized to conduct offensive cyber operations.

- Surge in Cyberattacks and AI-related Risks

Japanese organizations faced an average of 1,231 cyberattacks per week in 2025, with Russian and Chinese actors driving the volume in the first quarter of 2026. Ransomware incidents against Japanese organizations increased by 17.5% in 2025. In response to concerns about potential vulnerabilities linked to Anthropic's Mythos AI model, Japan announced on April 24, 2026, the establishment of a task force to address cybersecurity risks in its financial system.

- Increased Defense Spending and Modernization

Japan's annual defense budget has consistently increased, exceeding 9 trillion yen from fiscal 2023 onward, with a target to reach 2% of GDP by 2026, accelerated by the Takaichi administration. This funding supports modernization programs, including the development of the Hyper Velocity Gliding Projectile (HVGP), an indigenous boost-glide system with a deployable Block 1 range of approximately 500 kilometers.

- Major Defense Export Deal with Australia

Australia and Japan finalized a deal to purchase three upgraded Mogami-class frigates from Mitsubishi Heavy Industries, with the first delivery expected by December 2029. This represents Japan's largest-ever defense export and signifies a major boost to its shipbuilding industry and deeper strategic alignment with Australia.

- Energy Security Measures

In early April 2026, Japan's Nuclear Regulation Authority revised anti-terrorism requirements to facilitate the restart of operational reactors. The Kashiwazaki Kariwa Nuclear Power Plant Unit 6 (KK6) commenced commercial operation on April 16, 2026, a move expected to reduce Japan's reliance on LNG imports, particularly those transiting the Strait of Hormuz.

Geopolitical Impact and Regional Dynamics

Japan's recent security developments signify a profound recalibration of its post-war defense posture, with significant implications for regional stability and its relationships with major powers. The aggressive push to revise security documents, increase defense spending, and loosen arms export restrictions under Prime Minister Takaichi's administration reflects a clear intent to move beyond a purely defensive role and become a more proactive security provider in the Indo-Pacific. This shift is largely driven by an "increasingly severe security environment," particularly concerning China's expanding military activities and North Korea's continued provocations.

The full participation in the Balikatan exercises with the U.S. and the Philippines, including the deployment of combat troops to Philippine soil for the first time since WWII, underscores Japan's deepening security alignment with its allies in countering China's assertiveness in the South China Sea and around Taiwan. This expanded role strengthens the "First Island Chain" defense strategy and enhances interoperability among like-minded partners, potentially creating a more robust deterrent against Chinese maritime expansion. However, this also risks escalating tensions, as evidenced by Beijing's strong condemnation of Japan's revised defense export rules and its increased military presence in the East China Sea and Taiwan Strait. The downgrading of Japan's diplomatic assessment of China in its 2026 Diplomatic Bluebook further highlights the growing trust deficit and the trajectory towards a more competitive relationship.

Relations with the United States remain the cornerstone of Japan's foreign policy, with new initiatives announced to strengthen the alliance, enhance economic security, and bolster deterrence. Japan's substantial investments in the U.S. energy and critical minerals sectors further solidify this economic-security compact. While Japan seeks to strengthen its autonomy, it does so within the framework of its alliance relationships, particularly with the U.S. and Australia, as demonstrated by the significant frigate deal. The growing emphasis on economic security, including measures related to rare earths and critical infrastructure, reflects a broader regional trend of de-risking supply chains from over-reliance on China. The increasing cybersecurity threats, particularly from state-sponsored actors, also necessitate closer international cooperation, especially with the U.S. and European partners, to develop robust "active defense" capabilities.

Military and Defense Analysis

Japan's military and defense posture is undergoing a rapid and fundamental transformation, moving away from its post-war pacifist constraints towards a more assertive and capable force. The ongoing revision of the three key security documents is set to formalize this shift, emphasizing a drastic strengthening of the Self-Defense Forces and a sustained increase in defense spending. The defense budget has seen successive increases, exceeding 9 trillion yen from fiscal 2023 onwards, with a clear commitment to reach 2% of GDP by 2026. This significant financial commitment is aimed at acquiring and developing advanced capabilities necessary for a "sustained warfare" environment, including investments in artificial intelligence and other cutting-edge technologies.

A critical aspect of this modernization is the development of counterstrike capabilities, exemplified by the indigenous Hyper Velocity Gliding Projectile (HVGP). With a Block 1 range of approximately 500 kilometers already deployable and plans for variants reaching 3,000 kilometers by the 2030s, Japan is acquiring a genuine first-island-chain strike capability. The loosening of defense export restrictions is also a game-changer, not only for boosting the defense industry but also for enhancing interoperability and collective deterrence with strategic partners. The sale of Mogami-class frigates to Australia is a prime example of Japan's emerging role as a defense exporter and a contributor to regional security networks. The full participation of the Japan Maritime Self-Defense Force (JMSDF) and Ground Self-Defense Force (GSDF) in the Balikatan and Salaknib exercises in the Philippines, deploying combat troops and significant hardware, demonstrates a practical application of these strategic shifts, focusing on integrated territorial defense, maritime security, and casualty evacuation in contested environments.

Outlook and Forecast

Short-term trends (1-3 months):

In the immediate future, Japan will likely continue its accelerated efforts to revise its core security documents, with expert panel meetings continuing monthly. We can anticipate further details emerging regarding specific defense capability enhancements, budget allocations, and potential legislative changes related to the Self-Defense Forces' operational scope. The full participation in the Balikatan exercises, concluding on May 8, will be closely analyzed for lessons learned and future cooperation frameworks. Diplomatic tensions with China are expected to remain elevated, particularly following the downgrading of relations in Japan's Diplomatic Bluebook and China's strong reactions to Japan's defense policy shifts. Cybersecurity threats, especially from state-sponsored actors, will persist, prompting Japan to further operationalize its Active Cyber Defense Act and the newly formed financial cybersecurity task force.

Critical flashpoints and risk areas:

The East China Sea, particularly around the Senkaku/Diaoyu Islands, remains a critical flashpoint due to persistent Chinese maritime incursions and research activities within Japan's EEZ. The Taiwan Strait is another high-risk area, with Japan's increasing involvement in regional security exercises and its naval transits drawing Beijing's ire, raising the potential for miscalculation. The South China Sea, where Japan is now actively participating in military exercises with the U.S. and the Philippines, could also see increased Chinese pushback against what it perceives as an expanding "security network" aimed at containment. The ongoing debate within Japan regarding the Three Non-Nuclear Principles and potential alterations could also become a significant domestic and international flashpoint.

Indicators to monitor:

Key indicators to monitor include the progress and final content of Japan's revised security documents, especially any explicit mention of counterstrike capabilities or changes to the Three Non-Nuclear Principles. The frequency and nature of Chinese maritime and air incursions in the East China Sea and around Taiwan will be crucial. Further joint military exercises involving Japan, the U.S., and the Philippines, particularly those involving "combat-capable" troops or new weapon systems, should be watched. Developments in Japan's defense industry, including new export deals or public-private partnerships for advanced technologies, will indicate the pace of its defense-industrial base strengthening. Lastly, the volume and sophistication of cyberattacks targeting Japanese critical infrastructure and financial systems will be a gauge of the ongoing cyber threat landscape.

Strategic recommendations:

Japan should continue to strengthen its multi-layered deterrence by investing in advanced capabilities, including long-range precision strike and integrated air and missile defense systems, while ensuring interoperability with key allies. It is crucial to maintain robust diplomatic channels with China to manage tensions and prevent unintended escalation, despite the downgrading of relations. Simultaneously, Japan should deepen its security cooperation with regional partners beyond the U.S., such as Australia, the Philippines, and other ASEAN nations, to build a resilient security network in the Indo-Pacific. Enhancing cyber resilience across all critical sectors, including space systems and financial infrastructure, through public-private collaboration and offensive cyber capabilities, is paramount. Finally, transparent communication regarding its defense policy shifts, both domestically and internationally, will be essential to manage public opinion and reassure regional partners while deterring potential adversaries.
