Executive Summary

During the period of May 01 to May 08, 2026, Japan significantly accelerated its shift towards a more assertive security posture, marked by unprecedented military exercises and a historic overhaul of its defense export policies. The nation's Self-Defense Forces (SDF) participated in large-scale multinational drills in the Philippines, including the first overseas combat troop deployment since World War II and the live firing of anti-ship missiles, drawing strong condemnation from China. Concurrently, Japan continued to strengthen diplomatic and defense ties with regional allies like the Philippines, Australia, and Indonesia, driven by growing concerns over China's expanding military activities and North Korea's missile programs. Domestically, Japan advanced its "active cyber defense" capabilities and moved to centralize its intelligence apparatus, reflecting a comprehensive strategy to address a complex and challenging security environment.

Key Security Developments

- Military Activities and Exercises: Balikatan 2026

Japan's Self-Defense Forces (SDF) participated in the Balikatan 2026 exercises in the Philippines from April 20 to May 8, 2026, alongside forces from the US, Australia, the Philippines, France, New Zealand, and Canada. This marked the first time Japanese combat troops were deployed overseas since the end of World War II. During the drills on May 7, Japanese forces fired two Type-88 surface-to-ship missiles in waters between the Philippines and Taiwan, successfully sinking a decommissioned Philippine navy corvette approximately 75 kilometers offshore in the South China Sea. This live-fire exercise, observed by Japanese and Philippine defense ministers in Ilocos Norte, underscored Japan's enhanced operational capabilities and its commitment to regional security, while also provoking anger from China.

- Military Activities and Exercises: Salaknib Drills

Prior to Balikatan, Japanese Ground Self-Defense Force (GSDF) troops participated for the first time in the Salaknib drills with the US and the Philippines, which commenced on April 6, 2026, and are set to run until May 20, 2026. Approximately 420 GSDF personnel joined these maneuvers, focusing on enhancing operational training and combat capabilities in environments that include new domains, reflecting a deepening of military cooperation with key regional partners.

- Defense Policy and Strategic Shifts: Easing of Defense Export Rules

In mid-April 2026, Japan approved a major revision to its defense export rules, lifting long-standing restrictions and allowing the overseas transfer of a broader range of lethal military equipment, including missiles and warships. This historic policy shift, which became effective in April 2026, aims to boost Japan's defense industrial base and strengthen security cooperation with allies, marking a significant departure from its post-World War II pacifist stance.

- Defense Policy and Strategic Shifts: Strengthening Pacific Defense

On April 1, 2026, the Japanese Ministry of Defense established the Pacific Defense Architecture Office, signaling Japan's intent to bolster its defensive posture in the Pacific region. The government plans to revise its three core security documents—the National Security Strategy, the National Defense Strategy, and the Defense Buildup Program—within the year, with a central objective of strengthening Pacific defense in response to intensified Chinese military activities.

- Defense Policy and Strategic Shifts: Shift to "Active" Cyber Defense

Japan announced on March 17, 2026, that its military, the Self-Defense Force (JSDF), would be permitted to launch offensive cyber operations, including disabling attacking servers, effective October 1, 2026. This move towards "proactive cyber-defense" follows the enactment of an Active Cyberdefense Law in May 2025, which laid the legal groundwork for such actions to counter the growing threat of cyberattacks.

- Intelligence Activities: National Intelligence Overhaul

Japan's House of Representatives passed a bill in late April 2026 to establish a national intelligence council and a national intelligence bureau, aiming to create the country's first centralized national-level intelligence system since World War II. This overhaul, driven by Prime Minister Sanae Takaichi, seeks to consolidate intelligence gathering and analysis across government ministries and agencies to enhance national security and counter espionage activities.

- Diplomatic Relations: Philippines Defense Cooperation

On May 5, 2026, Japan's Defense Minister Shinjiro Koizumi and Philippine Defense Secretary Gilberto Teodoro agreed in Manila to establish a working group to facilitate the "early transfer" of used Maritime Self-Defense Force (MSDF) warships, specifically Abukuma-class destroyers, and TC-90 aircraft to the Philippines. This agreement is a direct outcome of Japan's eased export rules and aims to enhance the Philippines' maritime security capabilities amidst concerns over China's "coercive activities" in disputed waters.

- Diplomatic Relations: Australia-Japan Strategic Ties

Japan and Australia are formalizing closer ties, with Japanese Prime Minister Sanae Takaichi reportedly planning a visit to Australia in early May 2026 to sign a bilateral deal covering energy, rare-earths, food, and other critical commodities. This strengthened relationship includes a USD 7 billion contract for Japan to supply Australia with submarines, representing a significant defense acquisition under Japan's revised export rules.

- Diplomatic Relations: Indonesia Defense Agreement

On May 4, 2026, Indonesia and Japan signed an agreement to collaborate on joint military exercises and explore future weapons purchases. This further expands Japan's network of defense partnerships in Southeast Asia, aligning with its strategy to enhance regional stability and counter emerging threats.

- Defense Acquisitions and Arms Deals: Domestic Long-Range Missiles

Japan is preparing to deploy its first batch of domestically developed upgraded Type-12 land-to-ship missiles in Kumamoto prefecture by the end of March 2026. These missiles, with a range of about 1,000 kilometers, are part of Japan's efforts to fortify its "strike-back capability" and coastal defense, reflecting a significant enhancement of its offensive capabilities.

- Cybersecurity: Ransomware and Phishing Threats

In 2025, Japan experienced 226 cases of ransomware attacks, and phishing scams reached a record high of over 2,450,000 cases. An audit also revealed that nearly 60 critical government systems had inadequate security controls and management, highlighting the urgent need for Japan's new "proactive cyber-defense" strategy.

- Diplomatic Relations: Russia-Japan Overtures

On May 4, 2026, a Japanese ruling party lawmaker met with Russia's Deputy Foreign Minister Andrey Rudenko in Moscow, who indicated Russia's readiness to arrange talks between the foreign ministers of Japan and Russia in July. This potential meeting, the first since February 2022, suggests a possible, albeit cautious, diplomatic overture despite ongoing tensions over Ukraine and a long-running territorial dispute.

Geopolitical Impact and Regional Dynamics

Japan's security developments from May 1-8, 2026, signify a profound shift in its geopolitical stance, moving decisively away from its post-WWII pacifist constitution towards a more assertive and militarily capable nation. The participation of Japanese combat troops in the Balikatan 2026 exercises in the Philippines, including live-fire missile drills, directly challenges China's growing assertiveness in the South China Sea and East China Sea. This move, coupled with the historic easing of defense export rules, is perceived by Beijing as a resurgence of Japanese militarism, leading to strong rebukes and increased regional tensions. The exercises, held in waters between the Philippines and Taiwan, also carry significant implications for the Taiwan Strait, a critical flashpoint in the Indo-Pacific.

The deepening of security cooperation with the Philippines, including the planned transfer of used warships, directly addresses Manila's concerns over China's "coercive activities" in disputed waters and strengthens the "First Island Chain" maritime defense strategy. Similarly, the formalization of ties with Australia, including a substantial submarine deal, and the defense agreement with Indonesia, illustrate Japan's strategy to build a robust network of like-minded partners to counter China's expanding influence. These bilateral and multilateral engagements, often encouraged by the United States, are reshaping the regional security architecture, fostering alternative security pacts and enhancing interoperability among allies.

While strengthening its alliances, Japan also faces complex diplomatic challenges. The potential for foreign minister talks with Russia in July, despite strained relations, highlights Japan's pragmatic approach to managing diverse geopolitical interests. However, the primary driver for Japan's accelerated defense build-up remains the perceived threat from China and North Korea's nuclear and missile programs. The overall impact is a more militarized Indo-Pacific, with Japan playing an increasingly prominent role in regional deterrence and stability, but also risking further escalation of tensions with its main adversaries.

Military and Defense Analysis

Japan's military and defense posture is undergoing a rapid and comprehensive transformation. The record defense budget exceeding $58 billion for 2026, a 9.4% increase from 2025, is a clear indicator of this shift, aiming to reach 2% of GDP by March 2026. This increased spending is directed towards fortifying Japan's "strike-back capability" and coastal defense, with a significant allocation for long-range cruise missiles and uncrewed arsenals. The deployment of domestically developed upgraded Type-12 land-to-ship missiles in Kumamoto prefecture by March 2026 is a tangible example of this modernization, providing Japan with enhanced offensive capabilities.

The participation of Japanese combat troops in the Balikatan 2026 and Salaknib drills in the Philippines, including live-fire exercises with anti-ship missiles, demonstrates a significant evolution in Japan's force posture. This marks a departure from its traditionally self-defense-oriented policy, showcasing a willingness to project power and engage in combat-oriented training overseas with allies. The establishment of the Pacific Defense Architecture Office on April 1, 2026, and the planned revision of key security documents further underscore a strategic shift towards strengthening defense in the Pacific Ocean, particularly against China's expanding military footprint. This involves enhancing intelligence-gathering and surveillance capabilities in the Pacific, which were previously deemed insufficient.

The easing of defense export rules is a critical development for Japan's defense industry, allowing companies like Mitsubishi Heavy Industries and Kawasaki Heavy Industries to engage in overseas sales of advanced military systems. This not only boosts the domestic industrial base but also facilitates deeper defense partnerships and interoperability with allies, as seen in the submarine deal with Australia and the potential transfer of warships to the Philippines. Japan's involvement in the Global Combat Air Program (GCAP) with the UK and Italy to develop a next-generation fighter aircraft by 2035 further highlights its commitment to advanced capability development through international collaboration.

Outlook and Forecast

Short-term trends (1-3 months): In the immediate future, Japan is expected to continue its proactive engagement in regional security dialogues and military exercises. The ongoing Balikatan 2026 drills, concluding on May 8, will likely be followed by further announcements regarding enhanced defense cooperation with the Philippines and other Southeast Asian nations. Prime Minister Sanae Takaichi's anticipated visit to Australia in early May 2026 to formalize bilateral deals, including the submarine contract, will solidify Japan's strategic alignment in the Indo-Pacific. We can also anticipate continued diplomatic exchanges and potential follow-ups on the proposed Japan-Russia foreign ministerial talks in July, though significant breakthroughs are unlikely given the current geopolitical climate. Domestically, the implementation of the new national intelligence framework and the preparations for offensive cyber operations, set to commence on October 1, 2026, will be key areas of focus.

Critical flashpoints and risk areas: The South China Sea and the East China Sea, particularly around the Senkaku Islands, remain critical flashpoints where increased Japanese military presence and exercises could lead to heightened tensions with China. China's strong condemnation of Japan's recent actions suggests a potential for diplomatic retaliation or increased military posturing in these disputed areas. The Taiwan Strait also remains a high-risk area, with Japanese military activities in proximity potentially drawing further Chinese ire. North Korea's ongoing missile and nuclear programs, and its potential transfer of technology to Russia, continue to pose a significant and unpredictable threat to Japan's security. Cybersecurity threats, including ransomware and state-sponsored attacks, will remain a persistent concern, especially as Japan implements its new "active cyber defense" strategy, which could lead to retaliatory actions.

Indicators to monitor: Key indicators to monitor include the frequency and scale of joint military exercises involving Japan and its allies, particularly in the South China Sea and near Taiwan. Any further relaxation of Japan's arms export restrictions or new defense acquisition announcements will signal continued militarization. Diplomatic responses from China, including official statements, naval deployments, or economic measures, will be crucial in gauging regional reactions. The progress of the proposed Japan-Philippines warship transfer and the Japan-Australia submarine deal will indicate the effectiveness of Japan's new defense export policy. Domestically, the operationalization of Japan's offensive cyber capabilities and the impact of its centralized intelligence system on civil liberties will be important to observe.

Strategic recommendations: Japan should continue to strengthen its alliances and partnerships, particularly with the US, Australia, the Philippines, and other like-minded nations, to build a robust and collective deterrence against regional threats. While pursuing a more assertive defense posture, Japan should also maintain open lines of communication with China to prevent miscalculation and de-escalate potential conflicts. Investing further in cybersecurity infrastructure and talent development is paramount to effectively implement its "active cyber defense" strategy and protect critical national assets. Japan should also continue its efforts to diversify energy sources and critical supply chains to enhance economic security and reduce vulnerabilities to geopolitical shocks. Finally, transparent communication regarding its defense policy shifts and military activities will be essential to manage regional perceptions and avoid unintended escalation.
