Executive Summary

The Philippines' security landscape from May 22 to May 29, 2026, was characterized by intensified military cooperation with allies, persistent maritime tensions in the South China Sea, and ongoing efforts in defense modernization and cybersecurity. Joint military exercises with the United States, such as MAREX26, underscored a commitment to enhancing interoperability and regional security. Concurrently, the Philippines continued to assert its sovereign rights in the South China Sea, responding to alleged illegal activities by Chinese vessels and fortifying its outposts in the Spratly Islands. Diplomatic engagements with regional partners like Vietnam and the Netherlands also highlighted a multifaceted approach to security, while domestic cybersecurity threats remained a significant concern.

Key Security Developments

- Military Activities and Exercises

The US-PH Marine Exercise 2026 (MAREX26) concluded on May 29, 2026, after commencing on May 18, 2026, in Camp Iranun, Barira, Maguindanao del Norte. This exercise, the third of its kind in the province, involved personnel from the Philippine Marines, US Marine Corps, Philippine Army, Philippine National Police, Philippine Coast Guard, Philippine Air Force, and Marine Reservists. Training activities focused on maritime security operations, amphibious and mechanized maneuvers, littoral live-fire drills, and special operations to strengthen interoperability and coordinated response capabilities.

- Defense Policy and Strategic Shifts

The Philippines is actively pursuing its Comprehensive Archipelagic Defense Concept (CADC), with discussions ongoing regarding the potential acquisition of Japan's Type 88 surface-to-ship missile system. Armed Forces of the Philippines spokesperson Rear Adm. Roy Vincent Trinidad stated on May 27, 2026, that this system would significantly enhance the country's defensive capabilities under the CADC, which aims to protect all Philippine territories, including its 200-nautical-mile exclusive economic zone.

- Diplomatic Relations

On May 28, 2026, it was reported that Vietnam and the Philippines are set to deepen their strategic partnership with an upcoming state visit by General Secretary of the Communist Party of Vietnam Central Committee and President of Vietnam To Lam to the Philippines from May 31 to June 1, 2026. This visit aims to promote a more robust and effective bilateral relationship, coinciding with the 50th anniversary of diplomatic ties and the Philippines' chairmanship of ASEAN in 2026. Additionally, the Philippines and the Netherlands commemorated their 75th anniversary of diplomatic relations on May 18, 2026, with a joint statement affirming enhanced cooperation in defense, cybersecurity, and maritime security.

- Security Incidents and Threats

The Philippines continued to face maritime security challenges in the South China Sea. On May 3, 2026, the Philippines announced it would deploy aircraft and vessels to challenge and drive away four Chinese research vessels, including the drone mothership Yuan Wang, operating illegally in Philippine waters near the Spratly Islands. This follows accusations made in April 2026 by the Philippines' National Security Council that Chinese crews used cyanide around Second Thomas Shoal in the Spratly chain, damaging reefs and potentially compromising the BRP Sierra Madre.

- Defense Acquisitions and Arms Deals

A defense equipment and technology transfer agreement was signed between the Philippines and Japan on May 5, 2026. This deal aims to strengthen defense ties, with initial transfers expected as grants and future acquisitions potentially involving purchases. The Philippines is particularly interested in Japan's Type 88 surface-to-ship missile system, which was notably used during the Balikatan exercise earlier in May 2026. The country is also nearing operationalization of three BrahMos supersonic cruise missile batteries acquired from India.

- Cybersecurity

A Cyber Risks Brief issued on May 14, 2026, highlighted ongoing cybersecurity threats to the Philippines, including China-linked espionage targeting Philippine infrastructure, the exploitation of local trust through AI-generated scams and illegal text blasters, and the Instructure breach which exposed data of thousands of institutions. The Philippine National Police Anti-Cybercrime Group (PNP-ACG) reported arresting 332 individuals for various cyber violations, including online fraud and fraudulent investment schemes, during the first quarter of 2026.

- Maritime and Border Security

The Philippines has significantly expanded its military presence in the Spratly Islands as part of its "Maritime Resilience" strategy. As of May 12, 2026, satellite imagery confirmed the extension of the runway on Thitu Island (Pag-asa) to 1.5 kilometers, enabling it to host military surveillance and transport aircraft. Concurrently, a strategic deep-water port has been completed on Nanshan Island (Lawak), providing the Philippine Coast Guard with a permanent logistics hub in contested waters.

- Counter-terrorism

The Department of Justice (DOJ) Task Force on Anti-Terrorism continued its efforts, securing convictions and conducting training on the amended Implementing Rules and Regulations (IRR) for law enforcement and justice sectors on May 4, 2026. Separately, the US Embassy in the Philippines issued a security alert in early May 2026, cautioning US citizens in Leyte, Mindoro, Negros, and Samar due to recent fatal clashes between the Armed Forces of the Philippines and the New People's Army (NPA).

Geopolitical Impact and Regional Dynamics

The period from May 22-29, 2026, underscored the Philippines' pivotal role in the Indo-Pacific's evolving security architecture, largely driven by its strategic location and ongoing disputes in the South China Sea. The continued robust military cooperation with the United States, exemplified by exercises like MAREX26 and the recently concluded Balikatan 2026, reinforces the "ironclad" alliance and signals a collective commitment to regional stability and a rules-based international order. The participation of multiple nations, including Australia, Japan, Canada, France, and New Zealand, in Balikatan 2026, further highlights a growing multilateral approach to security in the region, aimed at enhancing interoperability and deterrence against potential aggressors.

Tensions with China in the South China Sea remain the most significant geopolitical flashpoint. The Philippines' accusations of cyanide poisoning around the Spratly Islands and its assertive response to illegal Chinese marine research vessels demonstrate Manila's resolve to protect its sovereign rights and exclusive economic zone. The fortification of Thitu and Nanshan Islands with extended runways and deep-water ports, completed as of May 12, 2026, represents a strategic move to enhance the Philippines' "Maritime Resilience" and project its presence in contested areas, directly challenging China's expansive claims. These actions, while bolstering national defense, inevitably contribute to heightened regional tensions and draw increased attention from major powers.

The Philippines' diplomatic engagements, such as the deepening strategic partnership with Vietnam and the defense cooperation with the Netherlands, reflect a broader strategy to diversify security relationships and build a network of like-minded partners. As the ASEAN Chair in 2026, the Philippines is also pushing for the conclusion of a South China Sea Code of Conduct based on international law, particularly the UN Convention on the Law of the Sea (UNCLOS), which could have significant implications for regional maritime governance. The ongoing discussions about Taiwan Strait security, which influenced the scope and location of Balikatan exercises, further illustrate how regional dynamics are interconnected, placing the Philippines at the nexus of several critical strategic interests for global powers.

Military and Defense Analysis

The Armed Forces of the Philippines (AFP) is actively pursuing a comprehensive modernization program, with a clear focus on enhancing its maritime and air defense capabilities. The ongoing Horizon 3 military modernization initiative, with an allocated budget of US$35 billion over the next decade, aims to acquire advanced missile systems, modern tanks, and upgrades to artillery. The Philippine Navy is slated to receive the largest share of projects under Horizon Two, with six offshore patrol vessels (OPVs) from South Korea expected between 2026 and 2028, significantly boosting its maritime patrol and surveillance capabilities.

A key development in this period is the strong interest in acquiring Japan's Type 88 surface-to-ship missile system, which is seen as a crucial component for the Philippines' Comprehensive Archipelagic Defense Concept (CADC). This potential acquisition, alongside the nearing operationalization of the BrahMos supersonic cruise missile system from India, signifies a strategic shift towards a more credible deterrence posture, particularly in the context of South China Sea disputes. The recent Balikatan 2026 exercise, which featured the Type 88 missile system for the first time, provided a practical demonstration of these advanced capabilities.

Despite these advancements, the Philippines still faces significant gaps in its integrated air and missile defense (IAMD) networks. While short-range SPYDER air defense batteries have been acquired, the country still lacks sufficient quantities of air defense batteries, modern fighter jets, interceptors, and medium-range IAMD systems. This vulnerability could pose challenges in defending against sophisticated aerial threats and in protecting critical military installations. The increased defense spending, with a record-high PHP50 billion for 2025 and PHP40 billion for 2026, reflects the government's commitment to addressing these capability gaps and accelerating the AFP's modernization to become a more formidable force in regional peace and security.

Outlook and Forecast

Short-term trends (1-3 months): In the immediate future, the Philippines will likely continue to prioritize its maritime security in the South China Sea. Expect continued patrols and challenges against foreign vessels conducting unauthorized activities, particularly around the Spratly Islands and Second Thomas Shoal. Diplomatic efforts to finalize the South China Sea Code of Conduct, with the Philippines as ASEAN Chair in 2026, will intensify, though significant breakthroughs remain challenging given differing interpretations of international law. Military exercises with allies, building on the momentum of MAREX26 and Balikatan 2026, are also expected to continue, focusing on interoperability and enhancing collective defense capabilities.

Critical flashpoints and risk areas: The South China Sea, particularly the Spratly Islands and Second Thomas Shoal, remains the primary flashpoint due to overlapping territorial claims and frequent encounters between Philippine and Chinese vessels. The recent accusations of cyanide poisoning and the deployment of Philippine assets against Chinese research vessels underscore the high potential for escalation. Domestically, areas in Mindanao, specifically Leyte, Mindoro, Negros, and Samar, will continue to be risk areas due to ongoing clashes with the New People's Army (NPA). Cybersecurity threats, including state-backed espionage and sophisticated scams, pose a persistent risk to critical infrastructure and public data.

Indicators to monitor: Key indicators to monitor include the frequency and nature of encounters between Philippine and Chinese vessels in the South China Sea, any new defense acquisitions or transfers, particularly those related to missile systems and naval assets, and the progress of multilateral security dialogues. The outcomes of diplomatic engagements, such as the upcoming Vietnam-Philippines state visit, will also be important for assessing regional alignment. Domestically, the effectiveness of counter-terrorism operations against the NPA and the resilience of cybersecurity defenses against evolving threats will be crucial.

Strategic recommendations: The Philippines should continue to strengthen its alliances and partnerships, particularly with the United States and Japan, to enhance its deterrence capabilities and maintain a strong regional security posture. Accelerating the modernization of its naval and air assets, with a focus on integrated air and missile defense systems, is paramount to addressing existing capability gaps. Furthermore, investing in robust cybersecurity infrastructure and public awareness campaigns is essential to counter the growing digital threats. Diplomatically, the Philippines should leverage its ASEAN chairmanship to push for a legally binding and UNCLOS-compliant Code of Conduct in the South China Sea, while also exploring avenues for de-escalation and confidence-building measures with China.

MANILA, Philippines — Interior and Local Government Secretary Jonvic Remulla on Friday said Sen. MANILA, Philippines — The Makati City government on Friday announced the rollout of P356.48 million worth of mid-year cash incentives for more than 59,000 Blu Card holders, with qualified senior citizens starting to receive their P6,000 benefits through GCash. Mayor Nancy Binay said the city has allotted the funds for 59,414 registered Blu Card holders in Makati, including more than 8,000 senior citizens who will receive their incentives through manual payouts in designated village payout centers beginning June 3. Binay said digital payouts through GCash started on May 28, 2026 for senior citizens with registered and validated accounts. “We have made sure that no qualified beneficiary will be left out because of lack of access to an e-wallet. Everyone will receive their mid-year incentive, no one will be deprived. We know our senior citizens are expecting this, so it is only right that they receive the benefit allocated for them,” Binay said. The city government said onsite distribution for other qualified beneficiaries will run from June 3 to 10 across Makati’s 23 villages. Binay said the schedule for manual payouts has been posted on the city government’s official Facebook page, My Makati. The mayor said the city would continue offering alternative payout methods for residents who may have limited access to digital platforms, even as Makati expands the use of cashless disbursement systems. She also reminded Blu Card holders to ensure that their GCash accounts are active and properly registered to avoid delays in receiving the incentive. The city government said unclaimed incentives may still be claimed on June 11 and from June 15 to 18 at the Cash Division on the third floor of Makati City Hall Building 1. Binay said the city remained committed to providing timely assistance and accessible services for elderly residents, citing their contribution to Makati’s growth and development.

MANILA, Philippines — A Butuan-bound Filipino seafarer was arrested at the Ninoy Aquino International Airport (NAIA) Terminal 2 after making a bomb joke during aircraft boarding, the PNP Aviation Security Group (Avsegroup) reported on Friday. The incident occurred on May 26, 2026 when a cabin crew member asked the passenger about the contents of his bag. The passenger allegedly replied that it contained a bomb, later claiming he was just joking. Crew members immediately reported the statement to airport authorities, prompting standard security protocols. The passenger, a 26-year-old seafarer from Talisayan, Misamis Oriental, was scheduled to travel to Butuan City. Aviation police, along with bomb disposal and K9 units, immediately deployed to check the passenger's luggage and the surrounding area, but no explosive or dangerous materials were found. The suspect was later taken into custody by police for the alleged violation of Presidential Decree 1727, or the Anti-Bomb Joke Law. Brig. Gen. Dionisio B. Bartolome, Avsegroup chief, said that all statements involving bombs or explosives were treated with utmost seriousness and even jokes were not taken lightly as they could cause panic and disrupt airport operations. "We urge the public to always be responsible with their words, especially inside airport premises," Bartolome said.

- Think it's hot now? The next five years will smash records, UN says (2026-05-28 20:07)

WASHINGTON — In the next five years, the Earth is overwhelmingly likely to surge again and again past the international climate threshold set as safe and shatter its hottest-year record along the way, according to new United Nations climate projections. The World Meteorological Organization also forecasts an overheating Arctic that warms nearly 3 degrees Fahrenheit (1.66 degrees Celsius) between now and 2030 and a dangerous drought with potential wildfires for the Amazon, a crucial part of Earth's natural defenses to lessen human-caused climate change. A hotter globe from the burning of coal, oil and gas means more extreme weather including floods, droughts and heat waves, scientists said. The projections by the U.N. climate agency and the United Kingdom's Meteorological Office said there's a 75% chance that the average global temperature between 2026 and 2030 will be more than 1.5 degrees Celsius (2.7 degrees Fahrenheit) higher compared to pre-industrial times. That threshold is the agreed-upon limit of warming — averaged over 20 years — set in 2015 by the Paris climate agreement. A U.N. science report a few years later detailed how exceeding that 1.5 mark means more likely death, danger and species loss. Even though it's only a few tenths of a degree, some of the planet's ecosystems, such as coral and glaciers, can't handle the strain. Passing warming limit has consequences, but no cliff. There's a 91% chance that at least one of the next five years will shoot past the 1.5 degree threshold and an 86% chance that one of those years will smash the record for Earth's hottest year set in 2024, the WMO report said. The WMO projects each year between now and 2030 to be between 1.3 degrees Celsius (2.3 degrees Fahrenheit) and 1.9 degrees Celsius (3.4 degrees Fahrenheit) since the late 1800s. "It's important to note that (1.5) is not kind of a cliff edge that we're going to fall off," said report co-author Melissa Seabrook, a climate scientist at the U.K. Meteorological Office. "Every kind of 0.1 of a degree has more and more severe impact." She pointed to unprecedented May heat in Europe this week. An entire year or more above the 1.5 degree mark "means a whole range of extreme weather events, probably many so hot/wet/dry that it exceeds anything we've experienced in the past and thus crucially, anything our city planning, agriculture etc. has anticipated," Imperial College of London climate scientist Friederike Otto, who wasn't part of the report, said in an email. "This will mean many people will lose their lives, we are in for a lot of food price shocks, and more intense wildfires." Nearly all the shorter-term forecasts call for a strong El Nino — a natural warming of parts of the central Pacific that alters weather worldwide and spikes global temperatures — to form soon. The WMO report said it could stretch all the way to 2028. Because of that, Seabrook said 2027 will likely break the 2024 heat record. And if the next five years do average more than 1.5 degrees Celsius since pre-industrial times, that means Earth will have warmed a quarter of a degree Celsius (0.45 degrees Fahrenheit) in a decade, which is faster than the previous rates of warming. Those were closer to two-tenths of a degree Celsius per decade. Climate scientists are debating whether global warming is accelerating, “which obviously is quite scary,” and if these projections come true it would give additional evidence to those who see a speeded up rate of change, Seabrook said. Accelerating warmth forecast in the Arctic The projections, based on the averaging of about 200 runs of computer simulations using 13 different climate models from various countries, show warming in the Arctic rising 3.5 times faster than the rest of the globe, because there's less ice and snow that had been reflecting solar radiation to space, Seabrook said. It becomes a vicious cycle. “As the temperature warms, more sea ice melts, the worse this makes it,” Seabrook said. Winters in the Arctic from 2020 to 2025 on average were 2.1 degrees Fahrenheit (1.2 degrees Celsius) warmer than the 1991-2020 average. The WMO projects the next five winters will average 5.1 degrees Fahrenheit (2.8 degrees Celsius) warmer than that recent normal, Seabrook said. The report also forecasts Arctic sea ice to continue to shrink in the summer. Amazon may get drier, sparking fire worries The report calls for even warmer and unusually dry conditions in the Amazon basin, and that could be devastating for both local residents and the planet as a whole, Seabrook said. People rely on the Amazon for water and the hotter, drier conditions should increase wildfire risk, Seabrook said, threatening to turn the Amazon, which now sucks heat-trapping carbon dioxide out of the atmosphere, into a region that worsens the problem. Africa's Sahel area, which has been extra dry, is likely to get more than normal rain and that could lead to flooding, Seabrook said. United Nations officials said efforts to curb climate change haven't been enough. “Despite the progress of recent years, it's clear that global heating is still outpacing global efforts to contain it, and the baking temperatures in Europe, India and elsewhere show yet again the brutal human and economic impacts of humanity still burning colossal amounts of coal, oil and gas,” U.N. climate chief Simon Stiell said about the WMO report. “Whether it's extreme heat, mega-storms, floods, massive wildfires or droughts hitting food supply and prices,” he said, “every nation is already paying a huge price from this global climate crisis.”

(2026-05-28 17:53)

PARIS — Venus Williams will not play in the women's doubles at the French Open alongside Hailey Baptiste. They withdrew on Thursday and no reason was given by organizers. But Baptiste was forced to retire during her second-round singles against Wang Xiyu on Wednesday after landing awkwardly on her left leg late in the first set. The Americans were replaced by Eudice Chong and Veronika Rejvec in the draw. Williams, who turns 46 next month, was a singles wild-card entry at the Australian Open. She lost in the first round and became the oldest woman to compete in an Australian Open singles main draw. A seven-time major singles winner, Williams previously held the No. 1 ranking in singles and doubles. Williams lost the French Open singles final to younger sister Serena in 2002 and they twice won the French Open doubles together, in 1999 and 2010.

• Why your co-worker might be listening to music tuned to 432 hertz (2026-05-28 17:40)

NEW YORK — Yoselin Sanchez has been in chronic pain since she was born with cervical scoliosis. While little eases the discomfort, she's found ways to distract herself from hurting. She practices yoga. She performs free flow dance. And while she works, she frequently listens to house music tuned to 432 hertz, a frequency lower than typical concert pitch. "Music is medicine. Sound is medicine," said Sanchez, who provides telehealth services for a healthcare management organization in California. "It helps me focus and be engaged with the patient I'm assisting, and it also helps me relax." Music recorded in 432 hertz (cycles per second) is taking off on social media platforms and music streaming services, where users can find an increasing number of tracks and playlists employing the alternate tuning, everything from meditation soundscapes to reggae songs recorded by Ziggy Marley. Many proponents assert that 432 hertz is aligned with nature. Others assign the frequency healing properties or the power to reduce blood pressure. So far, there's no robust scientific evidence to support those claims. "There are frequencies going on right now that are higher than what we can hear and lower than what can hear. And they're not special because they're one of the billions and billions of frequencies that we're receiving right now," said Susan Rogers, a Berklee College of Music professor emeritus who worked as Prince's sound engineer during the 1980s. "To set one aside and say that it is the frequency of the universe is, as far as the science community is concerned, nonsense." To Sanchez, it doesn't matter if the pain relief and emotional benefits she ascribes to 432 hertz music have a scientific explanation. "When it comes to music, it could activate different feelings in people, the vibrations of it. It's not like a one-size-fits-all," she said. The story behind 440 and 432 hertz Throughout history, as people sang or played music together, they tuned their instruments to the same pitch to create a harmonious sound. Singers and musicians often chose a musical note — typically the A above middle C on a piano — as a reference point. The music genre known as "432 Hz" is characterized by its tuning, in which the A above middle C is pitch-adjusted to vibrate at 432 hertz instead of the standard 440 hertz. The lower frequency is noticeable to the naked ear, sounding like slightly lower notes. Some people feel the alteration produces a warmer, more harmonious sound that resonates with the human body and the natural world. Many orchestras and musicians now tune their instruments to 440 hertz. But that wasn't always the case. Until the 19th century, musicians tuned instruments according to local standards, which varied from one country to the next, said Fanny Gribenski, a music historian at New York University. "For most of music history, people are just singing within their own vocal range," she added. Eventually, there were orchestras and musical groups tuning to higher frequencies, and some composers became concerned that singers would be unable to perform music from the past, Gribenski said. "The idea that it should be mainly a lower frequency than the ones that were in use at the time is really the cultural concern for protecting music from the past, protecting the voices of singers," she said. At the same time, as international travel became more widespread, the desire for a common tuning frequency grew. In 1939, representatives from multiple European countries and the U.S. agreed to accept 440 hertz as the international standard. Artists continued to experiment with pitch over the decades that followed. In the 1980s and '90s, sound engineers sometimes took a recorded song and sped it up or slowed it down to achieve a brighter or slower sound, moving away from the frequency of 440 hertz,

Rogers said. But Rogers doubts that retuning a whole band or orchestra to 432 hertz would improve its sound since many modern instruments were designed sound prettiest while tuned to 440 hertz. “Some of those instruments might sound a little sweeter, but it’s likely that most won’t,” she said. Higher pitch generally means more brilliance, or perhaps a little more power in some instruments, Gribenski said. For those listeners who appreciate the lower 432 hertz music, “I wonder if there is a sense of deceleration, slowing down slightly, and also taking one step down from the bright sounds of modernity,” she said. Working and 432 hertz music Fans of working while accompanied by a 432 hertz soundtrack cite a variety of reasons. Amelia Beamer, who handles marketing at the North Carolina pharmacy her parents own, Andrews Apothecary, says she thinks taking work breaks to listen to music tuned to 432 hertz helps with her attention deficit hyperactivity disorder. She’s noticed that she feels more focused if she listens before she starts a project. Beamer works for 25 minutes, takes a five-minute listening break and then returns to the task at hand. She also listens to other frequencies, such as music tuned to 528 hertz. “It definitely helps me feel more grounded and more centered,” Beamer said of 432 hertz music. “It helps me slow down and to take some intentional space and time for myself.” Diana Wolf Torres, who creates videos and writes a newsletter about robots, frequently gets migraines and is sensitive to noises. If a gardener is using a leaf blower next door, she has difficulty ignoring it. Listening to music tuned to 432 hertz or other sounds such as white noise while wearing noise-canceling headphones helps. “I just want to be there and get it done and feel like I’m doing my best writing possible, and anything that keeps me in the zone is a fantastic tool,” Torres said. Torres doesn’t think there’s any science or special properties behind 432 hertz music but that “maybe some people find this lower tuning more soothing.” She noted that most listeners won’t know if music labeled 432 hertz on social media is labeled accurately. “What does it matter? If you’re getting an effect, are you really going to check the resonance? Do you care?” Torres asked. Sanchez, the telehealth worker, also enjoys listening to tunes fixed to other alternative frequencies, such as 528 hertz and 963 hertz. “It’s something worth exploring and finding out for yourself whether it has any benefits or not,” Sanchez said. “For me, I find that grounding is beneficial to my overall wellbeing, so I see how it helps my livelihood.”

- One Tech Tip Your next job interview could be with an AI bot (2026-05-28 17:19)

VERNON HILLS, Illinois — Have you applied for a new job? If you’ve been shortlisted, get ready to be interviewed by artificial intelligence. Deluged by a flood of AI-generated job applications from easy-apply job boards, recruiters are turning to AI to cope. Companies are using chatbots to interview candidates, typically at the screening stage, through phone calls, text messaging or video chats with on-screen avatars. Recruiters have been using AI-powered hiring tools for years to assess job applicants, and their use has been expanding in step with technology advances. Many people find AI job interviews unsettling, though the trend seems here to stay. According to recent research by hiring platform Glasshouse, more jobseekers are reporting they’ve faced AI job interviews. But many applicants have walked away from the hiring process because of it, which could be a sign that they’re either creeped out, or they could be fraudulent or were not serious candidates, depending on who you ask. Here's what to expect from an AI job interview and how to do your best: Do your homework. Whatever the interview format, the fundamentals still apply, said Amanda Augustine, a career coach at CareerMinds, which helps companies support laid-off workers with resume writing and job search services. Ahead of the interview, review the job description, research the organization, and understand what it's looking for. "The more prepared you are, the easier it will be to tailor your responses, even when you're interacting with AI instead of a person," she advised. Get used to the format. If you've never done an AI job interview before, the first time could be unnerving or unsettling. I did a demo AI interview set up by Netherlands-based TestGorilla, one of numerous platforms providing recruitment tools for companies. First came two sets of questions, one that tested problem-solving skills and another gauging work experience. Then I faced an AI-generated female face. "My goal is to learn more about you and the experiences, skills and competencies that you might bring to this role," it said, adding that I should plan to spend about two minutes to answer each of three questions. Unlike a human interview, there was no warm-up chit-chat, no chance to build a rapport. There was no point in smiling or trying to break the ice. Experts say the best way to get over that is preparation. "You need to practice out loud," said Priya Rathod, workplace trends editor at online job board Indeed. "And when I say practice out loud, I mean, say the actual answers out loud," because the chatbot needs to record what you're saying, she said. Also keep in mind you're providing information about yourself to a machine, not having a conversation. "You have to be particularly descriptive and a very clear communicator in your language so that they can pick up on things that a regular interviewer might pick up through your facial expressions and tone," Rathod said. An AI interviewer "cares less about my tone and more about what it is that I'm saying," she added. Use an online interview simulator to prep — there are many available. They can record your answers and provide instant feedback on your content, delivery or pacing. They'll also help you get used to speaking into a camera, manage time limits and give your answers in a structured way without the natural back-and-forth of a live conversation, Augustine said. Get ready for behavioral questions. For my demo interview, the AI grilled me for a communications professional role. One question it asked was how I use AI in my "workflow," including examples of both success and failure. When I replied that I saved lots of time with an AI transcription tool for interviews and other recordings, it summarized my answer and then asked me if I wanted to add anything else. I wasn't sure whether I had answered satisfactorily. I scored "below average" on this question, according to TestGorilla's assessment, which said I provided "no concrete metric" such as minutes saved. "The improvement claim is therefore vague," it said. AI interviewers are asking these "behavioral questions" because they want candidates to provide examples of how they handled specific work situations, complete with numbers and metrics, Rathod said. "Those are the kinds of questions that AI relies heavily on. And the trap that we see a lot of people falling into is giving really vague answers," she said. Candidates should still rely on tried and tested tactics like the STAR method — short for situation, task, action, result. So be prepared to talk about a specific work situation and the task assigned to you, the action that you took, and the result, Rathod said. "You want to use numbers as much as possible. Even if you're not in a revenue driving role, there are ways in which you can say

(how) you influenced something or impacted something within a group,” she said. Setup still matters. Don't neglect the physical setup of your desk and computer — it's still important even if the video-based interview is with AI, and not a person. Test your audio and video in advance. Make sure the lighting is bright enough and is on your face. Raise your laptop to eye level so that you're not looking down at the camera. “Small adjustments, such as using a stack of books or a ring light, can make a noticeable difference in how polished and professional you present,” Augustine said. Don't be tempted to use AI shortcuts. Jobseekers might be tempted to use AI to help come up with answers. After all, they're so easy to use and if you're not talking to a human, no one will be able to tell, right? “That's a big no-no because it's pretty obvious” to both the AI interviewing tool and anyone who might review the recording, said Rathod. Using AI for your answers “can sometimes immediately disqualify you.” If you're having difficulty answering, you can always ask it to clarify or repeat the question. The question might even be designed to figure out if you're using AI to cheat. TestGorilla's head of marketing, Mehak Chowdhary, said it sometimes poses simple questions worded in a very convoluted way. “We do that intentionally to understand whether you are running an AI alongside, because the AI will then try and optimize for the length of the question,” she said. “But if you know your skill set, you will understand what's being asked. “And we strongly recommend candidates put the AI devices aside. This is a test of your capability.”

- A rare blue micromoon rises this weekend (2026-05-28 16:54)

CAPE CANAVERAL, Florida — Get set for a rare blue micromoon this weekend — a blue moon that's also the most distant and smallest-looking full moon of the year. A bonus: The brilliant star Antares will photobomb Sunday's spectacle for a celestial three-for-one. A blue moon occurs every two to three years when a second full moon squeezes into a single month. May 1 saw this month's first full moon. Since the moon's orbit isn't a perfect circle, the upcoming full moon will be farther from Earth than usual at a distance of 252,360 miles (406,135 kilometers), making it seem a bit smaller and dimmer. It's the opposite of a supermoon when a full moon comes closer to us than normal. The most recent supermoon, for instance, was just 225,130 miles (362,312 kilometers) away. The Virtual Telescope Project's Gianluca Masi, who will provide a live webcast from Italy, said Sunday's micromoon will appear about 6% smaller and 10% dimmer than that of an average full moon — “differences that are subtle enough to likely go unnoticed by most observers.” The scene will be especially thrilling south of the equator across the Pacific. For stargazers in Argentina, Chile, New Zealand, eastern Australia, parts of Antarctica and a smattering of other islands, Antares will vanish temporarily as the blue micromoon passes in front of it. The red supergiant star, 550 light-years away, is known as the “heart of scorpion” in the constellation Scorpius. A light-year is almost 6 trillion miles (9.7 trillion kilometers). There won't be any disappearing act for those looking up elsewhere in the world, with Antares constantly visible alongside the full moon. And despite the name, this blue moon won't appear turquoise, sapphire or any other shade. The term simply refers to the uncommon occurrence of two full moons in one month.

• Aid supplies reach heart of Congo's Ebola outbreak as WHO head travels to Kinshasa

BUNIA, Congo — Aid workers rushed supplies Thursday to the center of Congo's outbreak of a rare type of Ebola virus while beleaguered medical personnel struggled with a lack of equipment, a distrustful population and armed groups in a volatile region. A white cargo plane with aid donated by the European Union delivered masks, gloves, boots and medications — all of which are in short supply — to the northeastern town of Bunia at the heart of the outbreak in Congo's Ituri province. U.N.-branded forklifts lifted several cases into trucks. Health workers with scant supplies have been struggling to contain an outbreak of the Bundibugyo virus, a kind of Ebola that has no approved treatment or vaccine. In some areas, doctors have resorted to wearing expired medical masks while treating suspected patients. Dangers faced by health workers have been heightened by anger among residents over the stringent medical protocols for dealing with the bodies of victims, which clash with local burial rites. Residents have launched at least three attacks against health centers in Ituri province. Aid donated by the EU is expected to arrive in batches over the next eight days, Jérôme Kouachi, head of emergency operations at UNICEF in Congo, told The Associated Press. World Health Organization Director-General Tedros Adhanom Ghebreyesus was on his way to Congo to see the efforts first-hand efforts. The WHO has declared the outbreak a public health emergency of international concern, in the hope of ramping up aid. The United States on Thursday said it is increasing its aid to Congo and Uganda by $80 million, bringing its commitment to more than $112 million since the outbreak. The additional money would pay for personal protective equipment for health care workers, Ebola test kits, support for health screening at airports and contact tracing, the U.S. State Department said. The Congolese government has confirmed more than 1,000 suspected cases, with at least 220 deaths, since it declared an outbreak on May 15. But the virus had been spreading undetected for weeks, and the WHO suspects it is much larger than what has been reported. The virus has also reached neighboring Uganda, which has confirmed seven cases and one death. On Wednesday, the Congolese government said the first survivor to recover from the virus had left a health center. “We are trying to catch up,” Congo Foreign Minister Thérèse Kayikwamba Wagner said earlier this week. “It is a race against the clock.” The response on the ground has been hampered by multiple challenges, including customs' red tape, insufficient storage facilities, bad roads and weak telecommunications, humanitarian agencies said in a report on Thursday. Tedros on Wednesday called for a ceasefire in a region where armed groups have staged violent attacks for decades. “We cannot build community trust or isolate the sick while bombs are falling,” he said. Tucked in the northeastern part of Congo close to the Ugandan border, Ituri province has been reeling from attacks by the Allied Democratic Force, a rebel group allied with the Islamic State group, and a coalition of ethnic militias. In early May, the ADF killed at least 40 people and burned several homes in Ituri. The illness has also been reported in two Congolese provinces south of Ituri — North Kivu and South Kivu, where the Rwanda-backed M23 rebel group controls many key cities, including Goma and Bukavu. The rebels have reported two cases. The region's main airport in Goma, which doubles as a staging ground for humanitarian efforts into the region, has been closed since January 2025, when M23 seized the city. The conflict has precipitated one of the world's largest humanitarian crises, with at least 7 million people displaced in eastern Congo.

- Justice Department opens investigation into E. Jean Carroll, who accused Trump of assault (2026-05-28 16:47)

WASHINGTON — The Justice Department has opened an investigation into whether E. Jean Carroll, the longtime advice columnist who has said Donald Trump sexually assaulted her in a New York department store 30 years ago, lied during the course of civil litigation against the Republican president, according to a person familiar with the matter. The person who confirmed the existence of the investigation was not authorized to publicly discuss an ongoing inquiry and spoke on the condition of anonymity. The perjury investigation is being led by the federal prosecutors' office in Chicago, and acting Attorney General Todd Blanche has had no involvement because of his prior work as Trump's personal attorney, the person said. Lawyers for Carroll did not immediately respond to requests for comment from The Associated Press on Thursday. It's the latest in a series of investigations the Trump administration Justice Department has opened into perceived adversaries of the president. The actions, including securing an indictment last month against former FBI Director James Comey, have raised alarm from Democrats and former officials that an institution meant to make prosecutorial decisions independent of the White House is being weaponized. Carroll has said a flirtatious, chance encounter with Trump in 1996 at Bergdorf Goodman's Fifth Avenue store in Manhattan ended violently. She said Trump slammed her against a dressing room wall, pulled down her tights and forced himself on her. Trump has called the allegations a "made-up scam," and he has attacked her motivations, saying they were politically driven or arose from a desire to promote her memoir. A jury in 2023 found Trump liable for sexually abusing Carroll, awarding her $5 million. The following year, another jury awarded Carroll $83.3 million in a defamation case related to Trump's social media attacks on her. The Justice Department is scrutinizing a statement Carroll made in the course of the civil litigation that no one else was paying her legal fees. It later became public that a Chicago-based organization backed by Reid Hoffman, the co-founder of LinkedIn, had helped fund Carroll's case. Trump's lawyers in the civil case accused Carroll of concealing that information, which they said called into question whether the case was politically motivated. A court entry earlier this month said Trump won't have to pay the award until the U.S. Supreme Court gets a chance to review the case or reject an appeal. The 2nd U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals agreed to a request by one of Trump's lawyers that it let the president delay the payment to Carroll, though it required that he post a $7.4 million bond to cover any additional interest costs, a request Carroll's attorney had made.

- Plunder cases filed vs Estrada, Bonoan (2026-05-28 16:12)

THE Office of the Ombudsman on Thursday filed plunder and graft charges against Sen. Jinggoy Estrada, former Public Works secretary Manuel Bonoan and three other people before the Sandiganbayan. "The Office of the Ombudsman has recommended no bail for the respondents in this case,” Assistant Ombudsman Mico Clavano said in a press briefing after the cases were filed in court. “Likewise, the office will pursue hold departure orders for the respondents so as to preserve the integrity of the case in court.” Later on Tuesday, the cases were raffled off to the Sandiganbayan divisions that would issue arrest warrants if probable cause is found. Estrada and Bonoan were the accused in the graft case that was raffled off to the Sandiganbayan Second Division. In the other graft case, which was raffled off to the court’s Fifth Division, the accused were Estrada, Bonoan, former Department of Social Welfare and Development (DPWH)-National Capital Region officials Denryl Caesar Cortuna, Manny Bulusan and Arturo Gonzales Jr. All five were named as accused in the plunder case, which was raffled off to the Fifth Division. If a court division finds probable cause, that division will issue an arrest warrant.

Estrada: No due process

Estrada on Thursday said he will exhaust all legal remedies to face the plunder charges filed against him before the Sandiganbayan. He noted that ever since the Senate leadership changed on May 11, the resolution of cases involving some members of the majority bloc, to which he belonged, was expedited. “As I have said before, if this is the price that I have to pay for standing by my principles and for what I believe in, then so be it,” Estrada said in a statement. He noted that barely a week after the Department of Justice (DOJ) issued its resolution regarding his case, the Ombudsman immediately filed the case without first conducting a thorough and independent fact-finding investigation. He said his lawyers are preparing the necessary steps to show the irregularities in the process of the filing of charges against him as some vital evidence in his favor was “not given weight and consideration.”

Estrada said this includes the letter from the Senate Legislative Budget Research and Monitoring Office which states that there was no record that he made an insertion in the 2025 national budget. But this “was simply set aside,” he said. Estrada also said he was not given the chance to study the resolutions of the DOJ and the Ombudsman so that he could file a motion for reconsideration before the filing of the plunder charges against him before the Sandiganbayan. This has serious implications on his right to due process, he added. Bonoan, too, has denied any involvement in corruption.

Layered insertions

“The cases stem from an intricate mechanism involving illegal budgetary insertions and project allocations within the DPWH infrastructure portfolio for Fiscal Year 2025,” Clavano said. “Our evaluation shows that substantial public funds were deliberately funneled into designated infrastructure projects in exchange for predetermined commission fees or kickbacks. Case records point to an accumulated sum of illicit payouts amounting to an aggregate sum of over P573 million which were systematically delivered to the principal respondent, Sen. Jinggoy Estrada.” While it acknowledged that the Legislative Budget Research and Monitoring Office issued a certificate in the absence of records that Estrada made budget insertions, the Ombudsman’s office said the certificate “does not capture all stages of the budgetary process, wherein insertions may be made in a layered method.”

Former DPWH undersecretary Roberto Bernardo, former NCR regional director Gerard Oplencia and former Bulacan first district engineer Henry Alcantara were excluded from being charged because they were state witnesses. “Our case is built on solid, immovable evidence,” Clavano said. “These state witnesses have provided comprehensive, cross-corroborated sworn statements that map out the execution of this scheme from its inception down to the logistics of the illicit payouts.” “The Office of the

Ombudsman is determined to pursue all cases still pending. We have one shot to get these cases right. The Filipino people need to see justice. This office is here to make sure we deliver just that,” he said. The charges came almost a year after President Ferdinand Marcos put the so-called ghost infrastructure projects, believed to have cost Filipino taxpayers billions of dollars, center stage during a July speech. Several construction firm owners, government officials and politicians have been accused of pocketing funds from the projects, but this is the first time a criminal case has been filed against a sitting lawmaker over the scandal. On Tuesday, Ombudsman Jesus Crispin Remulla said about eight more senators were being investigated and that three of them could also face charges. He did not provide their names. Remulla said the president’s congressman cousin Martin Romualdez, who resigned as a House speaker in September after being implicated in the scandal, is also being investigated. Last year, former congressman Elizaldy “Zaldy” Co, Public Works officials and members of a construction firm were charged in connection to the scheme. Estrada was charged in 2014 with plundering millions of pesos meant for government development projects, but the court acquitted him a decade later. Bishops call for accountability The Catholic Bishops’ Conference of the Philippines (CBCP) urged the government to uphold accountability — especially for public officials. In a statement on Thursday, Bishop Colin Bagaforo of the CBCP-Episcopal Commission on Interreligious Dialogue said the recent political developments, such as the escape of fugitive Sen. Ronald dela Rosa and Vice President Sara Duterte’s impeachment trial, are reminders that accountability must apply to all “regardless of political affiliation, social status, popularity or position in government.” “We therefore reiterate our call to all institutions mandated to uphold justice and accountability, including the Ombudsman, the Sandiganbayan and other accountability mechanisms of government — to relentlessly pursue all cases where there is probable cause and sufficient basis under the law,” Bagaforo said. “Those entrusted with greater power, authority and influence carry an even higher moral and legal responsibility before the people,” he added. The CBCP further noted that the rule of law is nullified if it makes exemptions — especially if those are made for those in power. Bagaforo encouraged the Filipino people to remain vigilant and actively engaged in demanding integrity and transparency in public service. At the same time, the CBCP called on public officials implicated in corruption to demonstrate “delicadeza” and a sense of shame. “Leadership is not merely about legal survival; it is also about moral credibility and the preservation of public trust,” said Bagaforo. Bagaforo also recognized that while they are calling for accountability, there are still public servants who continue to uphold them. “They represent the kind of leadership the Filipino people truly deserve — one rooted not in self-interest, but in integrity, accountability and love of country,” said Bagaforo. - Japan keen to boost defense ties with PH (2026-05-28 16:11)

TOKYO — Philippine President Ferdinand Marcos Jr. is receiving an exceptional level of hospitality in a four-day state visit to Japan that culminated on Thursday. There is a palace banquet, a prestigious national award and a clear message that Tokyo is keen to upgrade ties with a nation it sees as a key defense partner — and major arms customer — at a time of fears over China's military activity in Asia. Marcos' visit ending with his departure on Friday has included a greeting by Emperor Naruhito, who gave him the Grand Cordon of the Supreme Order of the Chrysanthemum. On Thursday, Marcos held talks with Japanese Prime Minister Sanae Takaichi, which are expected to result in statements further strengthening defense and weapons cooperation. Speaking on Wednesday to Japanese lawmakers, Marcos said the emphasis on raising ties to a higher level reflects an "exceptional level of trust" between the nations. Both nations have China firmly in mind as they tighten a military relationship that the United States hopes will act as a bulwark against Beijing's ambitions in the East and South China Seas, and its designs on Taiwan, the self-governing island China claims as its own. Marcos is the first potential major customer of Japanese arms since Takaichi's government scrapped a ban on lethal weapons exports. The change in April was a break from Japan's postwar pacifist policy as the nation accelerates its military and arms industry buildup. The nations agreed to pursue negotiations on a sale of multiple Abukuma-class destroyers and Japanese navy TC-90 training aircraft. Defense Secretary Gilberto Teodoro Jr., who observed joint live-fire exercises with his Japanese counterpart earlier this month, also expressed interest in Type-88 surface-to-ship missiles. Japanese officials say Marcos' state visit also is linked to the 70th anniversary of diplomatic ties between the two countries and to the Philippines this year holding the rotating presidency of the Association of Southeast Asian Nations. Marcos and Takaichi also are expected to arrange formal talks meant to achieve a military intelligence sharing pact, which would enable closer communication and help tighten trilateral military cooperation with the US, their mutual ally, Japanese officials said. Japan has provided a set of five coastal surveillance radars to the Philippines as part of official security assistance and intelligence-sharing would enhance reconnaissance cooperation. Japan wants to enhance its partnership with the Philippines beyond Marcos' presidency, which ends in 2028, as Tokyo looks to avoid what is considered flip-flopping on China policy by some previous Philippine governments. Marcos has taken a hard-line stance against China over maritime disputes in the South China Sea. During his presidency, the Philippines and Japan have rapidly bolstered their security ties bilaterally and trilaterally with the US. Japan and the Philippines signed a pact in 2024 allowing their forces to smoothly visit each other's country for joint military drills. This paved the way for Japan to deploy 1,400 military personnel as regular participants in joint military exercises. The two countries signed a separate defense pact this year that would allow the tax-free provision of ammunition, fuel, food and other necessities when their forces stage joint training. During the state visit, Marcos and Takaichi also are set to discuss energy cooperation and a Japan-initiated multinational funding framework announced in April. That framework is designed to help Southeast Asian countries, including the Philippines, stabilize oil reserves through financial assistance to build necessary infrastructure as they struggle from the fallout of the Iran war that has halted oil transports through the Strait of Hormuz. Maritime ties On the sidelines of the president's state visit, the Department of Migrant Workers (DMW) and Japanese maritime stakeholders held a high-level dialogue at the country's embassy in Tokyo, Japan. A Philippine delegation, led by DMW Secretary Hans Leo Cacdac, Overseas Workers Welfare Administration chief Patricia Yvonne Caunan and DMW Undersecretary Felicitas Bay, met with the Japanese Shipowners' Association, the International Mariners' Management Association of Japan and the All Japan Seamen' s Union. During the meeting, the DMW announced a Japan Desk to “streamline communication and expedite labor coordination with Japanese principals.” “Today’ s dialogue is more than just a meeting. It is an opportunity for us to listen to one another, strengthen our partnership and ensure that the welfare, protection and future of Filipino seafarers remain at the center of our shared efforts,” Cacadac said in a speech. Bay, on the other hand, outlined system reforms in the DMW to address administrative bottlenecks raised by Japanese shipowners. “These include the rollout of an online employment contract verification system [for land-based workers], digital accreditation, and streamlined transaction flows to cut red tape and shorten crew-change lead times,” the DMW said. Both countries reiterated their commitments in improving tracking systems and processes for seafarers in high-risk areas, curbing predatory “ambulance chasing” litigation through mediation and ensuring that Filipino seafarers “remain competitive” amid the global maritime industry’ s digital and green transition.

- DOJ studies task force vs systemic corruption (2026-05-28 16:10)

THE Department of Justice (DOJ) is preparing to create a new interagency task force aimed at addressing institutional and systemic corruption in several government agencies long perceived to be vulnerable to graft, a well-placed source within the department told The Manila Times. The source said the initiative is being discussed under the leadership of Justice Secretary Fredderick Vida, who has reportedly directed preliminary talks on forming a coordinated investigative and enforcement body focused not only on individual corruption cases but also on alleged networks operating within key government institutions. According to the source, discussions included agencies that have previously faced allegations or public scrutiny involving corruption, bribery, regulatory capture, smuggling and illicit facilitation schemes. Among the agencies mentioned in the internal discussions were the Department of Public Works and Highways (DPWH), the Bureau of Internal Revenue (BIR), the Food and Drug Administration (FDA), and the Bureau of Customs (BOC). The source said particular attention may be given to the BOC amid continuing government efforts against smuggling and recurring reports involving the illegal entry of agricultural products and cigarettes despite existing enforcement campaigns. “The direction is no longer just going after fixers or low-level personnel, but identifying how these systems operate and who protects them,” the source said, speaking on condition of anonymity because the discussions have not yet been made public. The source added that DOJ leadership is exploring a more centralized anti-corruption framework that would allow prosecutors, intelligence units and law enforcement agencies to coordinate investigations more efficiently. Initial discussions, according to the source, have included the possible participation of representatives from the National Bureau of Investigation, the Philippine National Police Criminal Investigation and Detection Group, the Anti-Money Laundering Council, and other regulatory and enforcement agencies. The proposed task force may also examine alleged procurement irregularities, revenue leaks, smuggling protection schemes and possible collusion between public officials and private groups, the source said. No official announcement has yet been made by the DOJ regarding the creation of the task force. DOJ officials have also not issued a formal statement confirming the discussions. The development comes amid renewed government calls for stronger anti-corruption measures and tighter monitoring of revenue-generating agencies, particularly those involved in Customs collections, infrastructure spending and regulatory approvals. The BOC has repeatedly faced allegations and investigations related to corruption and smuggling over the years, particularly involving agricultural commodities, tobacco products and other highly taxed imports. Meanwhile, the DPWH, BIR and FDA have also periodically faced public scrutiny over alleged irregular transactions, bribery and permit-processing anomalies. FRANCO JOSE BAROÑA The source said the proposed body remains in the preparatory and discussion stage, with no final structure or formal mandate yet.

- Pag-IBIG housing loan maximum raised to P10M (2026-05-28 16:09)

THE Home Development Mutual Fund (HDMF), or Pag-IBIG Fund, has raised its maximum housing loan amount per borrower to P10 million in a bid to make the program more accessible, especially to middle-income and higher-earning Filipino workers particularly in Metro Manila and other highly urbanized areas. The increase in loan ceiling reflects the agency's mandate to serve Filipino workers from all income segments under the national government's Pambansang Pabahay Para sa Pilipino (4PH) program, Pag-IBIG Fund CEO Marilene Acosta said. "At Pag-IBIG Fund, our mandate is to serve all Filipino workers. This means serving first-time homebuyers and members who need subsidized support, as well as middle-income and higher-earning members who also need affordable long-term financing to buy homes for their families," Acosta said in a statement emailed to The Manila Times. Citing Pag-IBIG's strong financial position, she said it was able to offer a higher loanable amount while keeping its housing loan rates not only affordable, but among the lowest in the market. "With the higher loan ceiling, qualified borrowers now have even better access to home financing payable for up to 30 years, with interest rates that may go as low as 5.75 percent a year depending on their chosen fixing period," the Pag-IBIG chief executive said. "More importantly, this allows us to widen the reach of the Expanded 4PH Program so that more members across more income segments can gain access to decent and affordable homes, while eligible socialized housing borrowers continue to benefit from the 3-percent subsidized rate," she added. The broader Pag-IBIG Housing Loan Program aimed to make homeownership a practical alternative to renting for more Filipino workers, especially when available housing units are offered at prices that match members' income and borrowing capacity, Acosta pointed out. "For many families, rent is already one of their biggest monthly expenses. Through Pag-IBIG Fund's affordable housing loan terms, monthly amortizations for reasonably priced homes can be lower than rent in many urban areas. This is the value we want to give our members: instead of paying rent month after month, they can use their hard-earned income to pay for a home they can eventually call their own," she said. Housing Secretary Jose Ramon Aliling said the higher loan ceiling complements the program's ongoing subsidized 3-percent housing loan rate for qualified buyers of socialized housing, enabling Pag-IBIG Fund to serve more members seeking homes beyond the socialized housing segment through affordable long-term financing. The increase is part of the government's broader effort to make homeownership more accessible to Filipino workers across income segments, said Aliling, who chairs Pag-IBIG's board of trustees. "With the higher P10-million loan ceiling, Pag-IBIG Fund can now serve more members, especially Filipino workers who seek homes in higher price segments but still require long-term and affordable financing to own homes near their workplaces, schools and sources of livelihood," he said. "This move allows Pag-IBIG Fund to widen access to home financing across more income segments, in line with the directive of President Ferdinand R. Marcos Jr. to make decent and affordable housing more inclusive and accessible to more Filipino families," the housing czar added. Given the oversupply of ready-for-occupancy condominium units specifically in the National Capital Region and other urban areas, the top officials said that the move supported efforts to improve the take-up of available housing units. The DHSUD chief emphasized that the higher loan ceiling, combined with Pag-IBIG's long-term home financing, can make the purchase of these units more affordable for qualified members. Urging developer-partners to recalibrate their prices, Aliling convinced them to offer reasonable packages and help bring their available units within the reach of Pag-IBIG Fund members. "When housing prices, borrower capacity and affordable financing meet, more Filipino workers can finally own homes of their own," Aliling said.

- CIDG says Padilla 'indispensable' to dela Rosa's escape (2026-05-28 16:08)

THE escape of Sen. Ronald dela Rosa from the Senate premises would not have been possible without the help of his good friend and fellow senator Robinhood Padilla, the Criminal Investigation and Detection Group (CIDG) of the Philippine National Police said on Thursday. Maj. Gen. Robert Alexander Morico II said in a briefing at Camp Crame there was "indispensable cooperation" between the two senators. Padilla admitted giving dela Rosa a ride in his car in the early hours of May 14, shortly after the shooting incident, but insisted it was not because he was helping dela Rosa escape from authorities who were trying to serve him an arrest warrant. He said he just wanted to bring dela Rosa to Makati City, where a car was waiting for him. Morico refused to accept Padilla's explanation. "Hindi po 'yun incidental (It wasn't incidental). It's not a mere hitchhike, it is well-planned, well-coordinated. May (There was a) backup vehicle," Morico said.

- Leachon sues garin for cyber libel (2026-05-28 16:07)

HEALTH reform advocate Dr. Tony Leachon has filed a cyber libel case against congressman and former Health secretary Janette Garin over allegedly defamatory statements she made online. In a statement on Thursday, Leachon said the video — which was posted on May 22 — shows Garin accusing Leachon of "killing a patient without seeing the patient" and making other remarks ridiculing his professional competence. "This case is not about silencing critics. It is about drawing the line between fair comment and malicious falsehood. Integrity in governance and integrity in discourse are inseparable. Truth matters," Leachon said. "The allegations in the Facebook video meet the elements of cyber libel: defamatory content, public dissemination, clear identification and malice," he said. Leachon claimed that Garin's statements were meant to "dishonor his reputation as a physician-leader." He said his decision to press charges is grounded in the principle that “there is no wrong time to do the right thing.” Previously, Garin had remarked that Leachon always wanted to “land on headlines” and that he had always eyed the position of Health secretary, which Leachon denied. The Manila Times sought comment from Garin but she has yet to answer. Leachon also recently filed an Ombudsman case against Executive Secretary Ralph Recto and other Cabinet officials over the transfer of P60 billion in Philippine Health Insurance Corp. (PhilHealth) funds to the National Treasury.

- ICC judges streamline Duterte case, order defense to outline disputed evidence (2026-05-28 16:06)

JUDGES at the International Criminal Court (ICC) ordered the defense in the case against former president Rodrigo Duterte to submit a pre-trial document identifying which prosecution evidence it disputes, as the chamber moved to streamline proceedings and avoid delays. During Wednesday's first case status conference, Trial Chamber III Presiding Judge Joanna Korner said the order was intended to support the “fair and expeditious conduct” of the proceedings under Article 64(3) of the Rome Statute and Regulation 54 of the ICC regulations. “The Trial Chamber is of the opinion that it would assist the fair and expeditious conduct of this trial for the defense to provide a document before the start of trial, which sets out... the matters which the prosecution are proposing to lead in evidence with which the defense takes issue,” Korner said. The defense will be required to file the document one month before the trial begins. The directive came after defense lead counsel Peter Haynes argued that the alleged acts in the case do not amount to crimes against humanity. Korner clarified that the order does not require the defense to disclose its full strategy or prevent it from raising additional issues later in the proceedings. She also said the filing would not replace or interfere with the defense's right to submit a formal pre-trial brief. The conference saw extensive arguments over the deadline for victims seeking to participate in the proceedings. Haynes urged the chamber to impose a Sept. 30, 2026 cut-off date, warning that allowing applications to continue until late in the trial could create false expectations among victims whose cases may ultimately fall outside the scope of any conviction. “The harm that can be done in admitting thousands of victims to participate... only for them to find out in the reparations phase that none of them fall within the ambit of the convictions,” Haynes said. The chamber heard that the case currently involves 49 incidents and 73 deceased individuals. The prosecution opposed the proposed cut-off, arguing that the incidents listed by prosecutors were “only indicative” and not exhaustive. “A high number of victims will manifest themselves,” Senior Trial Lawyer Julian Nicholls said, adding that additional victims may still emerge during trial preparations.

- Student-athlete recruitment ramped up (2026-05-28 16:04)

THE Commission on Filipinos Overseas (CFO) and the Philippine Sports Commission (PSC) announced the recruitment of overseas Filipino student-athletes to compete in national and international competitions. The two agencies planned to form a Philippine schools overseas (PSOs) student-athlete delegation to compete in the Batang Pinoy and the Palarong Pambansa

— the country's flagship national youth games. The initiative follows a recent exploratory meeting among the CFO, the PSC and global sports organization Fil-Nation Select. "The discussions centered on institutionalizing talent identification programs and cultural immersion initiatives designed to seamlessly connect overseas-based Filipino athletes with their heritage and the national sports ecosystem," the CFO said in a statement. The CFO is tasked with registering, regulating and monitoring PSOs. It oversees dozens of educational institutions serving Filipino communities across the globe, particularly in the Middle East to cater to children of Filipino workers in the region. Under its cultural and educational development mission, the CFO said it "is positioned to utilize these overseas campuses as grassroots launching pads for athletic scouting." Jan Karlo Magracia, CFO head executive assistant, said that PSOs serve as a direct channel to strengthen the cultural and political ties of non-resident Filipinos. He said that PSOs provide an untapped, structured environment for talent identification and grassroots sports promotion among the youth diaspora. To ensure that recruited athletes maintain a deep connection to the homeland, Marita del Rosario-Apattad, chief of the CFO's project management division, proposed integrating the CFO's existing Youth Leaders in the Diaspora (YouLeaD) program. Apattad said that the program's cultural components could reinforce national identity while offering a dual platform for leadership training and athletic exchanges. PSC Chairman John Patrick Gregorio welcomed the prospect of taking the CFO's grassroots programs global. Gregorio said expanding tournaments like Batang Pinoy to include diaspora student delegations would give nonresident Filipino youth a premier avenue to hone their skills while directly boosting the country's national pool. The collaborative vision gained immediate momentum as coach Cris Gopez, founder of Fil-Nation Select, detailed his organization's global projects and shared enthusiasm for sourcing international talent to fortify Philippine national teams. Following the multi-agency briefing, the PSC plans to sign a memorandum of agreement with Fil-Nation Select. The CFO intends to draft its own separate memorandum of understanding with the PSC to operationalize the talent scouting pipeline within its regulated schools.

- Temperatures likely to stay at record highs (2026-05-28 16:03)

GENEVA — Global average temperatures are likely to continue at or near record levels this year and for the next four years afterwards, the United Nations warned Thursday. The 11 hottest individual years ever recorded all happened from 2015 onwards and the UN's weather and climate agency said the trend was set to continue, with a new hottest-ever year "likely" before 2031. There is a 75-percent chance that the 2026-2030 five-year mean temperature will surpass the key threshold of 1.5 C above the 1850-1900 pre-industrial average, the World Meteorological Organization (WMO) said. The WMO outlook comes as western Europe swelters under a "heat dome" of warm air, breaking temperature records for May in Britain and France. "Global average temperatures are likely to continue at or near record levels in the next five years," the agency said. "It is likely (86 percent chance) that one year between 2026 and 2030 will surpass 2024 as the warmest year on record." El Niño effect on 2027 "There is an El Niño predicted for the end of 2026, which increases the chances of the following year, 2027, being the next record-breaking year,” said Leon Hermanson, lead author of the WMO’s Global Annual-to-Decadal Update. The last El Niño contributed to making 2023 the second-hottest year on record and 2024 the all-time high at around 1.55C above the pre-industrial average. El Niño is a natural climate phenomenon that warms surface temperatures in the central and eastern equatorial Pacific Ocean, bringing worldwide changes in winds, pressure and rainfall patterns. It typically takes place every two to seven years and lasts around nine to 12 months. 1.3 C to 1.9 C range. The 2015 Paris climate accords aimed to limit global warming to well below 2C above pre-industrial levels — and preferably below 1.5 C. The targets are calculated relative to the 1850-1900 average, before humanity widely began industrially burning coal, oil and gas, which emit carbon dioxide — the greenhouse gas largely responsible for climate change. “Annual global mean near-surface temperatures during 2026-2030 are predicted to range between 1.3 C and 1.9 C above the 1850-1900 average,” the WMO update said. The WMO said there was a 91-percent chance that global average temperatures will temporarily exceed 1.5 C above the pre-industrial baseline for at least one year between 2026 and 2030. Furthermore, there is a 75-percent chance that the entire 2026-2030 five-year mean will exceed 1.5 C above the 1850-1900 average. However, it is considered exceptionally unlikely — less than one percent — that any single year will exceed 2 C above the pre-industrial baseline in the next five years. Arctic heat warning. The 1.5 C barrier is expected to be broken with increasing frequency. The 1.5 C and 2 C limits in the Paris accords refer to sustained long-term warming — typically over 20 years — so temporary breaches do not necessarily mean the long-term goal is out of reach. Last year was one of the three warmest years on record, with the globally averaged near-surface temperature estimated at more than 1.43 C above the 1850-1900 baseline. The report was produced by Britain’s Met Office national weather service and the WMO’s lead center for annual to decadal climate prediction. It compiles forecasts from 13 different institutes. The report said Arctic temperatures over the next five northern hemisphere winters (November to March) were predicted to be 2.8 C above average temperatures for 1991-2020 — more than triple the global temperature anomaly for the same period. Predicted precipitation patterns for May to September from 2026 to 2030 forecast wet anomalies in the Sahel, northern Europe, Alaska and Siberia, as well as dry anomalies over the Amazon.

- P841M fake goods seized in Valenzuela raid (2026-05-28 16:02)

THE Bureau of Customs (BOC) said its operatives have seized an estimated P841 million worth of suspected counterfeit products in a raid at a warehouse in Valenzuela City. Customs authorities said the raid was initiated based on intelligence information saying the warehouse was being used to store large volumes of counterfeit imported items. Operatives from the Customs Intelligence and Investigation Service (CIIS) conducted surveillance and on-site validation to confirm the alleged illegal activities. Armed with a Letter of Authority, a joint enforcement team swooped down on the warehouse on April 10. During the inspection, authorities discovered thousands of suspected fake branded products packed inside the facility. The inventory showed a total of 1,460 boxes of perfumes and 364 boxes of lotions bearing labels of internationally known brands. Among the brands allegedly copied were Jo Malone, Versace and Cetaphil, along with several other popular consumer products. Customs officials said the shipment may have violated provisions of Republic Act 8293, or the Intellectual Property Code of the Philippines, particularly those covering infringing and counterfeit goods. Possible violations of the Customs Modernization and Tariff Act, including seizure and forfeiture provisions under Section 1113 in relation to Section 1400, are also being investigated. The warehouse was immediately sealed and secured by customs personnel with assistance from the Philippine Coast Guard to prevent the unauthorized movement of the goods. Authorities later issued a Warrant of Seizure and Detention on April 28, 2026, as investigators continue tracing the source and distribution network behind the counterfeit products. Customs Commissioner Ariel Nepomuceno commended MICP District Collector Geoffrey de Vera, CIIS-MICP operatives and partner enforcement agencies for the successful operation, stressing that intelligence-driven enforcement remains key to dismantling smuggling and counterfeit trade operations under the directive of President Ferdinand Marcos Jr. WILLIAM DE PASUPIL

- DSWD widens peace-building aid in conflict-hit communities (2026-05-28 16:02)

THE Department of Social Welfare and Development (DSWD) has expanded its peace-building and development interventions in conflict-affected areas, reaching thousands of former combatants and vulnerable families through livelihood, infrastructure and social protection programs. The agency said on Thursday that its Peace and Development Buong Bansa Mapayapa program continues to serve communities in Mindanao and other underserved areas as part of the government's broader effort to sustain peace and promote inclusive growth. DSWD Undersecretary Alan Tanjusay said more than 26,000 decommissioned Moro Islamic Liberation Front combatants are now working with the department as they return to civilian life. Among the department's key interventions is the Payapa at Masaganang Pamayanan Livelihood Program, which provides capital assistance to community associations in conflict-affected areas to help them establish sustainable sources of income. "We provide livelihood assistance, including as much as P300,000 in seed capital for groups living in conflict areas or those displaced by armed conflict so they can start rebuilding their livelihoods," Tanjusay said. The DSWD also continues to roll out infrastructure projects, including roads and bridges, in isolated communities, to improve mobility and access to basic services. Tanjusay said Social Welfare Secretary Rex Gatchalian visited Sirawai, Sibuco and Sulu, where housing units, financial assistance and livelihood support were distributed to residents, including former combatants. He added that the department is also partnering with local government units to address community-specific needs, including environmental programs such as tree planting. MOISES CRUZ

- DepEd activates Oplan Balik Eskwela (2026-05-28 16:02)

THE Department of Education (DepEd) will launch the National Oplan Balik Eskwela (OBE) on June 1, a week ahead of school opening day. "We are ensuring, together with various agencies of the government, that our learners' return to school will be safe, organized and smooth,"

Education Secretary Sonny Angara said in a statement. The DepEd is collaborating with several agencies, including the Department of the Interior and Local Government, Philippine National Police, Department of Health and the Metropolitan Manila Development Authority for Balik Eskwela. Angara said utility providers Manila Electric Co. (Meralco) and Metropolitan Waterworks and Sewerage System have finalized oversight measures to guarantee uninterrupted power and water services to all schools. “To process public feedback efficiently, the OBE Public Assistance Command Center will open public hotlines, emails and social media channels to handle public grievances in real time,” Angara said. - LTO criticized for using unauthorized IT system (2026-05-28 16:01)

A MULTISECTORAL coalition has blasted the Land Transportation Office (LTO) for reportedly using an information technology (IT) system of a company whose contract has already ended. The contract reportedly has expired in at least five regions in the country. Coalition 169 said the continued rollout of Stradcom’s IT system in Regions 9 (Zamboanga Peninsula), 10 (Northern Mindanao), 11 (Davao Region), 12 (Soccsksargen) and Caraga must first have the approval of the Department of Economy, Planning and Development. “Worse, it appears that no clearance has been disclosed for deployment on government-owned workstations,” Coalition 169 spokesman Johnny Gomez said in a press conference in Quezon City on Thursday. Coalition convenors Rene Santiago and Bernard Yu told reporters that a DepDev approval was a critical safeguard to ensure the public is not charged excessive fees for services delivered under a Build, Own, Operate arrangement. They said that nongovernment quick response (QR) code domains are being used in official LTO transactions handled through Stradcom. “With this, public information could be exposed to data privacy and cybersecurity risks if processed outside official state-controlled digital infrastructure,” Santiago and Yu said. Gomez said that no action was made on the case his group filed before the Office of the Ombudsman on May 4, 2026, against current and former transport officials, including ex-Transportation chief and now Public Works and Highways Secretary Vince Dizon over alleged irregularities tied to LTO’s continued use of Stradcom’s IT system. In the complaint, the group questioned the continued collection of a P169 “computer fee” from motorists. Gomez and his group alleged that some transport officials were protecting Stradcom, whose contract expired in February 2013. They estimated that the fee has generated around P2 billion to P3 billion annually since Feb. 10, 2013, amounting to billions of pesos collected from motorists and other LTO clients. “While P169.06 per transaction may appear minimal, its cumulative impact is significant. Across millions of transactions annually, this represents a substantial financial burden on Filipino motorists,” they said. Besides Dizon, other respondents include Transportation Secretary Giovanni Lopez, ex-Transportation chief Jaime Bautista, Transportation Undersecretary Ramon Reyes, ex-undersecretaries Jesus Ferdinand Ortega and Mark Steven Pastor, LTO chief Markus Lacanilao, former LTO chiefs Vigor Mendoza II and Teofilo Guadiz III, and Stradcom president Anthony Quiambao. The coalition said it has sought the preventive suspension of incumbent officials for up to six months. Gomez said his group would continue to pursue legal remedies and public accountability until the issue was resolved. The Times tried to get comments from the agency but received no reply. An agency source said top LTO officials would issue a statement soon.

- Stricter child abuse measures pushed (2026-05-28 16:01)

SEN. Sherwin Gatchalian renewed calls Thursday for tighter enforcement of laws against online sexual abuse and exploitation of children. The senator issued the statement after the Philippines ranked 15th worldwide in responding to child sexual violence, according to the 2026 Out of the Shadows Index. The global index, which evaluated 60 countries on their efforts to prevent and respond to sexual violence against children and adolescents, also placed the Philippines fifth in the East Asia and Pacific region. "Criminals continue to exploit the internet to abuse and profit from our youth. We must ensure that our laws are strictly enforced," Gatchalian said in Filipino. He emphasized the need to sustain aggressive measures against online child exploitation, citing the growing use of digital platforms by traffickers and abusers to target minors. Gatchalian highlighted key legislation aimed at strengthening the country's legal framework against child exploitation, including the Anti-Online Sexual Abuse or Exploitation of Children Act or Republic Act (RA) 11930 and the Expanded Anti-Trafficking in Persons Act of 2022 or RA 11862. RA 11930 institutionalized stronger safeguards against online child abuse and exploitation, including tighter monitoring of digital financial transactions linked to illegal activities and stronger coordination among government agencies and internet service providers. Meanwhile, RA 11862 expanded the definition of trafficking offenses and imposed stiffer penalties on perpetrators involved in child trafficking and other forms of exploitation. To support enforcement efforts, the 2026 national budget earmarked 119.2 million pesos for anti-trafficking operations and enforcement initiatives. An additional 111.6 million pesos was allocated for the National Coordination Center against Online Sexual Abuse or Exploitation of Children and Child Sexual Abuse or Exploitation Materials. The Out of the Shadows Index measured country performance across four major pillars: governance and accountability, prevention, healing and support services, and justice systems. Advocates have long warned that the Philippines remains vulnerable to online child exploitation due to widespread internet access, high social media usage, poverty, and the increasing sophistication of cybercrime networks. - Speaker Dy urges villages to lead fight against illiteracy (2026-05-28 16:01)

SPEAKER Speaker Faustino "Bojie" Dy III on Thursday rallied villages nationwide to take the lead in the fight against illiteracy, stressing that education and literacy are powerful tools in lifting Filipinos out of poverty. In a video message addressed to the Liga ng mga Barangay, Dy said this year's theme, "Zero Illiteracy — One Barangay at a Time," highlights the crucial role of barangay in ensuring that every Filipino gains access to learning, economic opportunities and a better life. "The theme carries a very deep message because the fight against illiteracy is not only a campaign for education. It is a campaign to provide opportunities, livelihood, and dignity. It is a fight for the future of our nation," he said. He warned that illiteracy continues to deprive many Filipinos of opportunities and prevents communities from fully participating in economic growth and development. The speaker emphasized that literacy empowers people to improve their lives and participate more fully in society and the economy. “That’s why it is important that we understand that literacy is empowerment. It is the key to empowering the people to improve their lives,” he added. Dy stressed that villages play the most important frontline role in addressing illiteracy because they are closest to the people. “You are the first to see the children who are not going to school, the youth who needs guidance, and the families who need support and to be given the opportunity to learn and progress,” he said. He said the campaign against illiteracy begins in communities. Dy also emphasized that improving literacy would create more job, business, and livelihood opportunities while strengthening the country’s workforce. “The people would be better prepared for the modern economy. Our workforce becomes stronger and our communities become more productive. In short, addressing illiteracy is not only a social responsibility — it is also an economic investment for the country’s future,” Dy said. Dy said the anti-illiteracy campaign reflects President Ferdinand Marcos Jr.’s vision of Bagong Pilipinas, where every Filipino is given the chance to learn, improve their lives and contribute to national development. “Ito ang diwa ng Bagong Pilipinas: isang bansang walang naiiwan, kung saan bawat Pilipino ay may pagkakataong matuto, umasenso, at makilahok sa pag-unlad ng bayan (This is the essence of the New Philippines: a nation where no one is left behind, where every Filipino has an opportunity to learn, progress and participate in nation-building),” he said. Dy, who began his career in public service as Kabataang Barangay chairman in Cauayan, Isabela, likewise renewed his support for stronger protection and benefits for barangay workers through measures such as the proposed Magna Carta for Barangays. “Kaya patuloy nating isinusulong ang mga hakbang tulad ng Magna Carta for Barangays upang mabigyan kayo ng sapat na suporta, benepisyo, training, at proteksyon na naaayon sa laki ng inyong tungkulin (That’s why we continue to push for measures like the Magna Carta for Barangays to provide you with ample support, benefits, training, and protection appropriate to your big responsibilities),” he said. “Dahil kung mas empowered ang ating mga barangay, mas magiging epektibo rin ang ating laban kontra kahirapan, kawalan ng oportunidad, at illiteracy (If barangays are more empowered, the fight against poverty, lack of opportunity and illiteracy becomes more effective).” PNA

- China urges fair treatment of nationals arrested in Philippines (2026-05-28 16:01)

THE Chinese Embassy in Manila lodged representations with the Department of Foreign Affairs over what it described as frequent apprehension of Chinese in the country. Ji Lingpeng, embassy spokesman, said that the embassy and its consulates in Cebu, Davao, and Laoag have lodged “solemn representations with the Philippine side immediately upon each incident.” “China attaches great importance to protecting the personal safety and legitimate rights and interests of Chinese nationals in the Philippines,” Ji said in a statement on Thursday. “It must be stressed that China fully respects the Philippines’ judicial sovereignty and its efforts to handle cases in accordance with law,” he said. “However, we firmly oppose selective and discriminatory law enforcement targeting Chinese nationals.” Beijing also asked Manila to “avoid undermining the personal safety, legitimate rights and interests of Chinese nationals, so as not to disrupt and damage normal people-to-people exchanges and economic and trade relations between the two countries." "The Chinese side reserves the right to take further measures," Ji said. He did not elaborate. The embassy earlier denied that the 69 Chinese arrested in Misamis Oriental are illegal workers. They have "valid" work permits, said Deputy Chief of Mission Zhou Ziyong as he complained of discriminatory law enforcement practice. Ji urged concerned Philippine authorities "to handle the cases in a fair and just manner in accordance with law, and earnestly safeguard the personal safety, legitimate rights and interests, and humane treatment of the Chinese nationals involved." The embassy reminded Chinese citizens "to abide by local laws and regulations, engage in lawful employment and business activities, stay away from acts inconsistent with the purpose of entry or visa category, and avoid overstaying." Ji asked the "Philippine side to notify the Chinese diplomatic missions, within four days, of the facts and reasons for which Chinese nationals have been detained, arrested or deprived of freedom by any means whether the national requests it or not in compliance with the Consular Agreement between the People's Republic of China and the Republic of the Philippines." "Should the investigation confirm that they have violated no Philippine laws, the relevant Chinese nationals shall be released as soon as possible, and no illegal or prolonged detention shall be allowed," he added. - Muntinlupa fire victims get govt assistance (2026-05-28 16:00)

SEN. Bong Go sent an outreach team to provide assistance to families affected by a fire in Barangay Putatan, Muntinlupa City on Tuesday. "What I always say is, we can buy things and earn money if we work hard. But the money we earn cannot buy life," the senator said in a video message. The relief operation benefited 90 families displaced by the fire. Of these, 87 suffered total damage to their homes, while three sustained partial damage. Go's team distributed snacks, vitamins, grocery packs, shirts, basketballs, and volleyballs to affected residents. In his message, the senator recognized government support programs aimed at helping victims rebuild their homes by providing financial aid for construction materials. As chairman of the Senate Committee on Health and Demography, Go encouraged residents with medical concerns to seek assistance from Malasakit Centers, a major part of his advocacy. The program consolidates services from the Department of Health (DOH), Department of Social Welfare and Development, Philippine Health Insurance Corporation, and Philippine Charity Sweepstakes Office in one location to make it easier for indigent patients to access assistance. Go is the principal author and sponsor of Republic Act (RA) 11463, or the Malasakit Centers Act of 2019, which institutionalized the program nationwide. At present, 167 Malasakit Centers are operational across the country, including 32 in Metro Manila and two in Muntinlupa City. In Muntinlupa, the centers are located at the Research Institute for Tropical Medicine and Ospital ng Muntinlupa. According to the DOH, the program has already assisted more than 17 million Filipinos. Stressing the importance of disaster preparedness and fire prevention measures, he noted that RA 12076, or the Ligas Pinoy Centers Act, was signed into law on Dec. 6, 2024, mandating the establishment of permanent and fully equipped evacuation centers in all cities and municipalities nationwide. - EU fines Temu 200 mn euros over illegal products (2026-05-28 15:51)

BRUSSELS, Belgium — The EU slapped a 200-million-euro ($232 million) fine on Chinese-owned online retailer Temu on Thursday for allowing the sale of illegal products, including dangerous baby toys and defective chargers. According to EU regulators, European consumers are "very likely to encounter illegal items" on Temu, and the company "seriously underestimated how often EU consumers are likely to" see such products. "The company failed to diligently identify, analyse, and assess the systemic risks of illegal products being offered on its platform and the resulting harm to consumers in the European Union," the EU said. Temu said it disagreed with the EU and that the fine was "disproportionate". The platform is extremely popular in the European Union, with 130 million users after entering the bloc's market in 2023. But it has come under fierce scrutiny since October 2024 when the EU opened its investigation, which preliminarily found in July last year that Temu had breached landmark rules over the risks of illegal products. "Temu is a very big player in the European market," EU tech commissioner Henna Virkkunen told reporters, adding that its size meant many EU consumers would be able to get illegal products. Thursday's fine is only the second imposed under the EU's powerful Digital Services Act (DSA) on content, after Elon Musk's X platform received a 120-million-euro fine in December. Under the DSA, the world's most popular digital platforms including social media apps and online retailers must conduct a risk assessment to understand what dangers they pose and how to tackle the risks. The EU slammed Temu for its 2024 risk assessment that it said "falls short of the standards", citing the discovery of baby toys, such as rattles, containing chemicals that exceeded legal safety limits, and chargers that failed basic safety tests. It also pointed to jewellery. The European Commission said Temu failed to properly assess the platform's design and how it "could amplify dissemination risks of illegal products". - EU focus on China - The DSA is part of a bolstered legal armoury to curb what the EU considers excesses by Big Tech, and fines can go as high as six percent of a company's total worldwide annual turnover. Temu's revenues were $61.7 billion last year. While the EU could have hit Temu with a higher fine, a European Commission official said the amount was proportionate to the breach since it concerned a risk assessment for one year where the conclusions were "clear-cut". Temu must now pay the fine and present a plan to the EU by August 28 that includes what action it will take to address the breaches. If Temu does not comply, it faces periodic penalty payments. It can also appeal the fine, as Musk has already done in the EU courts. Temu said it was "carefully reviewing the decision and assessing all options available to us", insisting it worked "constructively" with regulators. The company also said it has "since implemented additional measures to strengthen risk assessment, platform governance and user protection". The EU continues to investigate other suspected breaches in the same probe including the use of addictive design features that could hurt users' physical and mental well-being, and how Temu's systems recommend content and products. The fine comes a day before the EU executive is set to debate how the 27-nation bloc should approach China to level the playing field, with top EU officials warning that Europe must get tougher to defend its economy. Brussels has already stepped up its anti-subsidy investigations into Chinese companies investing in Europe, and on Thursday it opened an in-depth probe into Chinese e-commerce giant JD.com's bid for Ceconomy, a major German electronics retail group, on suspicion it was boosted by state subsidies.

- Youtube says will flag AI-generated content (2026-05-28 15:30)

PARIS, France — Youtube will in future automatically detect AI-generated content and flag the information to viewers on its platform, the Google-owned company said Wednesday. The move reverses a previous policy of relying on video creators to self-report if they had used generative AI tools. "If a creator doesn't specify whether or not they used AI, but our systems detect significant photorealistic AI use, we will now automatically apply a label," Youtube said in a blog post. The video platform's last steps on generative AI date back to 2024, when it requested that creators flag content where they had used the technology. Since then there have been major strides in producing photorealistic images and video, with widely available AI models including Google's Veo 3.1 and Seedance from Tiktok's parent company Bytedance. Creators will be able to challenge the new flags if they think their content has been unfairly labelled as AI, Youtube said. The platform added that the flags would have no impact on its algorithm for recommending videos to users. Other platforms and social networks to introduce automatic flagging of AI content recently include music streamer Spotify. Many online spaces are flooded with AI-generated images, video or audio, which is growing increasingly difficult to tell apart from human creations as the tools become more capable.

- Introducing Argus, a robot with 20 legs and eyes built to move and see in any direction instantly (2026-05-28 14:24)

DURHAM, N.C. — A robot being developed at Duke University is almost ready to face the world, in any direction. Instead of trying to copy symmetrical shapes from nature by building robots that look like people, dogs or insects, engineering professor Boyuan Chen and his team focused on uniformity in action, or what he calls "dynamic symmetry." The result was Argus. The roly-poly robot named after a mythological many-eyed giant has depth-sensing cameras attached to 20 telescoping legs that radiate from a central core. With no front, back, top or bottom, it can see and move in any direction instantly. "Instead of measuring how your legs are arranged around a different part of your body, we're measuring how fast you can move in any direction," Chen said. "Who said, you know, if you have a robot to help us in a most effective way, it has to look like us?" In experiments, Argus has navigated sandy beaches and forest undergrowth, rolling over obstacles and stabilizing itself after being pushed. It can climb between parallel brick walls by alternating bracing and thrusting motions with its legs. If one or more motor dies or a leg breaks, it continues to function. "Watching Argus move is unlike watching any other robot we've worked with," said Jiaxun Liu, a graduate student and co-author of a study about Argus published online Wednesday in the journal Science Robotics.

"The first time we saw it navigate among trees and rough terrain, even under heavy collisions, we knew this was something different." As part of their work, researchers developed a new design principle called dynamic isotropy that rates robots on a scale of 0 to 1 based on how uniformly they can accelerate in every direction. Most robots in use today, including humanoids and drones, score below 0.6. Argus scores 0.91. “When a robot can accelerate equally well in every direction, it stops needing to face the world in any particular way,” said Chen, who hopes the same principle could guide the development of search and rescue robots, underwater or aerial vehicles or robots with the ability to grip objects. “Instead of building a robot hand that looks like a human hand ... one idea is to think about having Argus be the hand itself, and it can manipulate objects in any direction,” he said. “The knowledge we can transfer to the rest of the world is much more deeper than building an existing robot or copying an existing species.”

- AI chiefs walk back job apocalypse warnings (2026-05-28 14:06)

WASHINGTON — The most prominent figures in artificial intelligence are stepping back from dire predictions about mass unemployment, as the industry faces growing public hostility over AI's promised transformation of the workplace. Nvidia chief executive Jensen Huang and OpenAI CEO Sam Altman, whose comments have stoked anxiety about AI's potential effects on society, are now arguing that doom-laden warnings were overblown or, in some cases, disingenuous. Speaking to Channel News Asia on Monday, Huang took direct aim at fellow executives who have publicly blamed AI for workforce reductions. “The narrative that connects AI to job loss, for many of the CEOs that are doing it -- it is just too lazy,” he said. “AI has just arrived. How is it possible they're already losing jobs?” Huang, who has long argued that AI will create as many jobs as it displaces, pushed back against the doom-and-gloom forecasts of some industry insiders, saying that the recent wave of corporate layoffs was not driven by AI. “How is it possible that AI became productive and useful only six months ago, and they were somehow laying people off two years ago because of AI? It doesn't make any sense,” he said. “It was just a way for them to sound smart, and I really hate that. I think we're scaring people and that's irresponsible,” he said. - Altman's mea culpa - Last week, British bank Standard Chartered announced plans to axe thousands of jobs by 2030 as artificial intelligence replaces employees in a range of administrative roles. The tech firm behind social network Snapchat cut 1,000 jobs last month, saying AI is boosting efficiency as it pushes towards profitability. Altman, meanwhile, offered a mea culpa. Speaking at the Commonwealth Bank of Australia's Accelerate AI Conference in Sydney, he said rapid AI development would not produce the “jobs apocalypse that some of the companies in our space advocate or talk about” -- including his own. “I thought there would have been more impact on entry-level white-collar jobs being eliminated by now than has actually happened,” he told the conference on Tuesday, as reported by The Australian. “I think I understand more about why that wasn't done -- obviously gratefully -- but that is an area where my intuitions were just off.” Anthropic boss Dario Amodei has also softened his tone, predicting recently that even if 90 percent of jobs are automated, the remaining 10 percent would be handled by human workers who would be vastly more productive. Amodei has long drawn criticism from fellow industry figures who regard him as an AI doomer, even as Anthropic has become a highly successful company, with Huang saying last year he “pretty much disagrees with almost everything he says.” The reversals from rivals

Altman and Amodi come as their companies -- OpenAI and Anthropic -- are expected to embark on high-profile IPOs that will require broad buy-in from investors to succeed. But earlier doom-laden statements have now come to haunt the AI industry as the public, notably in the United States, voices serious discontent in polling over the disruption that tech companies and political leaders predict from AI. Federal Reserve Governor Lisa Cook warned on Wednesday that the full effects of AI on employment may still be ahead. "We could be approaching the most significant reorganization of work in generations," she said in a speech at Stanford University, adding that AI-related job losses could precede any gains -- even if the overall long-run picture remains positive. Most economic institutions, including the European Central Bank, say that artificial intelligence has had only minor effects on employment so far.

- Marcos secures P53.6B in investment pledges from Japanese firms (2026-05-28 13:46)

MANILA, Philippines — President Ferdinand Marcos Jr. on Thursday secured P53.6 billion in potential investments from major Japanese companies covering expansion projects in shipbuilding, electronics manufacturing, semiconductor production, artificial intelligence (AI), and green maritime industries. The investments were committed during separate meetings with the President on the sidelines of his four-day state visit to Japan, the Presidential Communications Office (PCO) said. The investments include those of Tsuneishi Group Corp. to expand its shipbuilding facility in the Philippines, which is expected to make the country the fourth-largest shipbuilding nation in the world next to China, Japan, and South Korea. It also includes potential investments of Furukawa Electric Co. Ltd., which plans to expand its manufacturing operations, particularly those of advanced heat sink models and thermal management products. The company also plans to increase the production capacity for high-performance heat sinks at the Laguna Technopark. Sumitomo Electric Industries Ltd. is also expected to invest P4.3 billion in advanced electronics manufacturing, covering the construction of a new 4,706 square-meter facility in Cabuyao, Laguna. MinebeaMistumi Inc., meanwhile, plans to boost its semiconductor backend manufacturing, including battery-related components for hyperscale data centers, optical image stabilization technologies, and advanced precision manufacturing. The investments are expected to support the expansion of high-end smartphone camera actuators, data center battery protection modules, and analog semiconductor operations in Cebu to help address growing global demand linked to AI technologies.

MANILA, Philippines — Sen. Jinggoy Estrada on Thursday said he would "exhaust all legal remedies" against the plunder charges filed against him before the Sandiganbayan. The senator noted that barely a week after the Department of Justice issued its resolution regarding his case, the Ombudsman immediately filed the case without first conducting a thorough and independent fact-finding investigation. "As I have said before, if this is the price that I have to pay for standing by my principles and for what I believe in, then so be it," Estrada said in a statement.

MANILA, Philippines — Deputy Speaker and Iloilo 1st District Rep. Janette Garin said she was "fully prepared" to face health reform advocate Dr. Tony Leachon's cyberlibel allegations against her. "While I have yet to officially receive a copy of the complaint allegedly filed against me, I welcome the opportunity to address this matter in the proper legal forum", Garin, also a doctor, said in a statement posted on Facebook. "Legal actions are part of the landscape when you stand up for the public interest," she said. "I am fully prepared to face" the allegation "squarely under the rule of law," she said. Garin also said that she "will file the appropriate responsive pleadings once we receive the official copy of the complaint."

- Police raids in manhunt for dela Rosa defended (2026-05-28 11:12)

MANILA, Philippines — The police raids in Pampanga, Bulacan and Metro Manila in search of Sen. Ronald dela Rosa were done with an arrest warrant, the Criminal Investigation and Detection Group (CIDG) said Thursday. This was in contrast to the statement of the lawmaker's wife, Nancy dela Rosa who, quoting a friend whose home was raided by authorities, claimed that there was no warrant during the operation. "The local officials were very cooperative as well as the homeowners," Maj. Gen. Robert Alexander Morico II, CIDG director, told reporters in a press briefing in Camp Crame. "We have our warrant of arrest that we showed if it was needed," he noted. Dela Rosa's wife said her friend was informed by CIDG and National Bureau of Investigation (NBI) operatives that an arrest warrant was "not necessary" when asked to present it. On Wednesday, authorities launched intensified manhunt operations against dela Rosa. "I have the highest respect [for Nancy dela Rosa.] So, I understand her position. Of course, a spouse is a spouse. But, the owners can attest, even the local officials in the area, that the CIDG and the NBI acted very professionally," Morico said. "If there is any violation of law that we committed, they can always file cases against us with the National Police Commission or even the Internal Affairs Service," he added. Morico clarified that the warrant presented by authorities was the one issued by the International Criminal Court (ICC) in connection with dela Rosa's alleged role in the Duterte administration's war on drugs.

- House outperforms Senate in trust, performance ratings — survey (2026-05-28 10:44)

MANILA, Philippines — The House of Representatives continued to outperform the Senate in both trust and performance ratings, according to the latest "Boses ng Bayan" nationwide survey. The survey, conducted by the RPMD Foundation Inc. from May 20 to 25, 2026, sampled 2,500 randomly selected respondents across socio-economic classes nationwide, with a plus or minus 2 percent margin of error at a 95 percent confidence level. Results showed that the House sustained a significantly higher public confidence level, posting an Index of Governance (IOG) of 62.2 percent, composed of a 61.8 percent trust rating and a 62.7 percent performance rating. Respondents cited institutional stability, coordination among lawmakers, faster passage of measures, and visible constituency-based programs as key factors behind the chamber's stronger ratings, even amid continued economic and political pressures. Speaker Faustino Dy III registered an IOG score of 58.1 percent, marking an increase of 3.1 percentage points from RPMD's April 2026 survey. His trust rating rose to 57.5 percent from 54 percent, while his performance rating climbed to 58.8 percent from 56 percent. Participants in the survey described the House leadership under Dy as more organized and focused on legislative output and governance priorities, particularly on issues involving inflation, infrastructure, public services, and economic uncertainty. In contrast, the Senate recorded a significantly lower public confidence level, with an IOG of 36.1 percent, composed of a 35.4 percent trust rating and a 36.8 percent performance rating. The survey attributed the lower scores to public dissatisfaction linked to recent controversies, internal divisions, leadership tensions, and high-profile political exchanges that have dominated public discourse in recent weeks. Open-ended responses indicated that many participants viewed the Senate as increasingly preoccupied with political confrontation and personality-driven debates rather than urgent policy concerns. Some respondents described the chamber as struggling with cohesion and focus amid ongoing national issues. The Senate leadership under Senate President Alan Peter Cayetano received similarly weak ratings, registering a 34.2 percent IOG, with trust at 33.9 percent and performance at 34.6 percent. Under Cayetano, respondents cited perceptions of division, politicization, and institutional inefficiency, particularly in relation to inflation, corruption concerns, fuel prices, healthcare, and broader economic pressures. Dr. Paul Martinez, executive director of RPMD Foundation Inc. and a political analyst, said the findings reflected a shift in public preference toward institutions seen as more stable and service-oriented. "Members of the House of Representatives are more directly connected and accountable to their districts, while the Senate has increasingly been associated with political conflict and public confrontation," said Paul Martinez. He added that public patience for political theatrics was waning as households continued to face inflation and rising costs of basic goods, with voters increasingly demanding more concrete and consistent governance outcomes.

MANILA, Philippines — The Catholic Bishops' Conference of the Philippines (CBCP) urged the government to uphold accountability—especially for public officials. In a statement Thursday, Bishop Colin Bagaforo of the CBCP-Episcopal Commission on Interreligious Dialogue (CBCP-ECID) said the recent political developments where the escape of fugitive Sen. Ronald dela Rosa and Vice President Sara Duterte's impeachment trial were reminders that accountability must apply to all "regardless of political affiliation, social status, popularity, or position in government." "We therefore reiterate our call to all institutions mandated to uphold justice and accountability—including the Ombudsman, the Sandiganbayan, and other accountability mechanisms of government—to relentlessly pursue all cases where there is probable cause and sufficient basis under the law," the statement reads.

MANILA, Philippines — The Chinese Embassy in Manila "lodged representations" with the Department of Foreign Affairs over what it described as frequent apprehension of Chinese citizens in the country. The embassy and Chinese consulates in the country "have lodged solemn representations with the Philippine side immediately upon each incident." "It must be stressed that China fully respects the Philippines' judicial sovereignty and its efforts to handle cases in accordance with law," Ji Lingpeng, embassy spokesman said on Thursday. "However, we firmly oppose selective and discriminatory law enforcement targeting Chinese nationals," Ji said. He urged concerned Philippine authorities "to handle the cases in a fair and just manner in accordance with law, and earnestly safeguard the personal safety, legitimate rights and interests, and humane treatment of the Chinese nationals involved." The embassy reminded Chinese citizens "to abide by local laws and regulations, engage in lawful employment and business activities, stay away from acts inconsistent with the purpose of entry or visa category, and avoid overstaying."

- Filipino rapper M-Zhayt's politically charged FlipTop round against pro-Duterte rival goes viral (2026-05-28 09:21)

MANILA, Philippines — A politically charged third-round performance by Filipino rap battle emcee M-Zhayt against fellow emcee Plaridhel has gone viral online, after his bars criticizing disinformation, blind political loyalty, and Duterte-era killings ignited heated debate across Philippine social media. The viral exchange came during a recent FlipTop Battle League where M-Zhayt targeted Plaridhel's pro-Duterte stance as part of the match's lyrical and performative format, with both emcees using their stage personas in a form of competitive rap widely regarded as artistic expression and social commentary. Plaridhel, known among FlipTop viewers for openly supporting former president Rodrigo Duterte and the Duterte movement, also works as a teacher outside battle rap, a point repeatedly referenced by M-Zhayt during the round while criticizing misinformation and political fanaticism. Among the most reposted lines were attacks against people who spread fake news, believe AI-generated propaganda, and defend controversial political figures despite allegations tied to extrajudicial killings and corruption controversies during the Duterte administration. The round drew particularly strong reactions after M-Zhayt framed the verse from the perspective of a former Duterte supporter himself, declaring that "Filipinos against abusers" represented the "real unity," while challenging supporters who dismiss victims of violence and political abuse. Several viewers praised the performance as one of the most hard-hitting political rounds in recent FlipTop history, arguing that battle rap has long served as a platform for protest, criticism, and social reflection. Others, however, accused the emcee of turning battle rap into partisan messaging, fueling arguments online over the role of politics in Filipino hip-hop culture. The battle, uploaded after FlipTop's "Second Sight 15" event in Muntinlupa City, rapidly spread on Facebook, TikTok, Reddit, and X, with clips of the third round amassing heavy engagement and reigniting discussion on how battle rap intersects with Philippine politics and freedom of expression.

- Lawmaker, former Budget chief face separate charges before Ombudsman (2026-05-28 08:17)

MANILA, Philippines — Health reform advocate Dr. Tony Leachon filed a cyberlibel complaint against Congressman and former Department of Health (DOH) secretary Janette Garin over allegedly defamatory statements she made online. In a statement Thursday, Leachon said that the video—which was posted on May 22—showed Garin accusing Leachon of “killing a patient without seeing the patient” and making other defamatory remarks ridiculing his professional competence. “This case is not about silencing critics. It is about drawing the line between fair comment and malicious falsehood. Integrity in governance and integrity in discourse are inseparable. Truth matters,” Leachon said. Also on Thursday, Leachon filed a supplemental affidavit including former Department of Budget and Management (DBM) secretary Amenah Pangandaman in the plunder and technical malversation complaint he filed last Monday against Executive Secretary and former Finance secretary Ralph Recto and other people. These stemmed from the transfer of P60 billion from the Philippine Health Insurance Corporation (PhilHealth) to the national treasury. Leachon included Pangandaman “only to the extent of acts...occurring during her tenure as” DBM secretary. Recto has said, “The Supreme Court justices themselves said that I have no criminal liability because I ‘simply followed the law and implemented it in good faith.’” He also said that he did not financially benefit from the said funds.

- Pag-IBIG Fund raises housing loan limit to ₱10M to serve more Filipino workers (2026-05-28 07:41)

MANILA, Philippines — The Home Development Mutual Fund (HDMF), commonly known as the Pag-IBIG Fund, has raised its maximum housing loan amount per borrower to ₱10 million in a bid to make the program more accessible, especially to middle-income and higher-earning Filipino workers particularly in Metro Manila and other highly urbanized areas. The increase in loan ceiling reflects the agency’s mandate to serve Filipino workers from all income segments under the national government’ s ‘Pambansang Pabahay para sa Pilipino’ (4PH) program, Pag-IBIG Fund CEO Marilene Acosta said. “At Pag-IBIG Fund, our mandate is to serve all Filipino workers. This means serving first-time homebuyers and members who need subsidized support, as well as middle-income and higher-earning members who also need affordable long-term financing to buy homes for their families,” Acosta said in a statement emailed to The Manila Times. Citing Pag-IBIG’ s strong financial position, she said it was able to offer a higher loanable amount while keeping its housing loan rates not only affordable, but among the lowest in the market. “With the higher loan ceiling, qualified borrowers now have even better access to home financing payable for up to 30 years, with interest rates that may go as low as 5.75 percent a year depending on their chosen fixing period,” the Pag-IBIG chief executive said. “More importantly, this allows us to widen the reach of the Expanded 4PH Program so that more members, across more income segments, can gain access to decent and affordable homes, while eligible socialized housing borrowers continue to benefit from the 3 percent subsidized rate,” she added. Moreover, the broader Pag-IBIG Housing Loan Program was intended to make homeownership a practical alternative to renting for more Filipino workers, especially when available housing units are offered at prices that match members’ income and borrowing capacity, Acosta said. “For many families, rent is already one of their biggest monthly expenses. Through Pag-IBIG Fund’ s affordable housing loan terms, monthly amortizations for reasonably priced homes can be lower than rent in many urban areas. This is the value we want to give our members: instead of paying rent month after month, they can use their hard-earned income to pay for a home they can eventually call their own,” she emphasized. Department of Human Settlements and Urban Development (DHSUD) Secretary Jose Ramon Aliling said the higher loan ceiling complements the program’ s ongoing subsidized 3 percent housing loan rate for qualified buyers of socialized housing, enabling Pag-IBIG Fund to serve more members seeking homes beyond the socialized housing segment through affordable long-term financing. The increase is part of the government’ s broader effort to make homeownership more accessible to Filipino workers across income segments, said Aliling, who chairs Pag-IBIG’ s board of trustees. “With the higher ₱10-million loan ceiling, Pag-IBIG Fund can now serve more members, especially Filipino workers who seek homes in higher price segments but still require long-term and affordable financing to own homes near their workplaces, schools and sources of livelihood,” he said. “This move allows Pag-IBIG Fund to widen access to home financing across more income segments, in line with the directive of President Ferdinand R. Marcos Jr. to make decent and affordable housing more inclusive and accessible to more Filipino families,” the housing czar added. Given the oversupply of ready-for-occupancy condominium units specifically in the National Capital Region and other urban areas, the top officials stressed that the move was in support of the efforts to improve the take-up of available housing units. The DHSUD chief emphasized that the higher loan ceiling, combined with Pag-IBIG’ s long-term home financing, could make the purchase of these units more affordable for qualified members. Urging developer-partners to recalibrate their prices, Aliling convinced them to offer reasonable packages and help bring their available units within the reach of Pag-IBIG Fund members. “When housing prices, borrower capacity and affordable financing meet, more Filipino workers can finally own homes of their own,” Aliling said. Higher maximum loan amount remains subject to credit evaluation, capacity-to-pay requirements, collateral appraisal and other housing loan guidelines to ensure that borrowing remains responsible and sustainable for members, Pag-IBIG said. Both Aliling and Acosta believed that higher loan ceiling would further strengthen Pag-IBIG's role in bridging available housing supply to actual homebuyer capacity while encouraging developers to offer homes at prices that better match the income and financing ability of Filipino workers.

- American fugitive wanted for child molestation arrested (2026-05-28 07:33)

MANILA, Philippines — A 59-year-old American fugitive wanted in the United States for child molestation charges was arrested in Pangasinan by operatives of the Bureau of Immigration (BI) as part of the government's intensified campaign against foreign sex offenders hiding in the country. The arrest of Matthew Cole Calhoun highlights the continuing crackdown under the BI's #ShieldKids campaign, which targets foreign predators and transnational criminals exploiting vulnerable sectors in the Philippines. Authorities said Calhoun, a US citizen, was apprehended during an enforcement operation conducted on the evening of May 16 in Barangay Navaluan, Mangaldan, Pangasinan. The operation was carried out by members of the BI's Fugitive Search Unit (FSU) in coordination with US authorities, the National Bureau of Investigation Ilocos Regional Office, and the Armed Forces of the Philippines. Immigration Commissioner Joel Anthony Viado said the arrest supported the directive of President Ferdinand R. Marcos Jr. to strengthen border security and intensify the hunt for foreign fugitives seeking refuge in the country. FSU chief Rendel Ryan Sy said Calhoun was facing multiple criminal charges in Florida, including two counts of lewd or lascivious molestation classified as life felonies. He is also facing two additional second-degree felony charges related to the same offense, according to information shared by US authorities. The BI said American authorities were already moving to cancel Calhoun's passport, a step that would pave the way for his deportation from the Philippines. Viado commended the BI-FSU operatives for the successful operation, stressing that the bureau remained relentless in pursuing foreign criminals hiding in the country. "Our message is clear: predators and fugitives who attempt to hide in the Philippines will be found and removed," Viado said.

(UPDATE) MANILA, Philippines — The Office of the Ombudsman on Thursday filed non-bailable plunder charges against Sen. Jinggoy Estrada and others before the Sandiganbayan over alleged links to the flood-control scam. "The Office of the Ombudsman has recommended no bail for the respondents in this case," Assistant Ombudsman Mico Clavano said in a press briefing after the filing of the cases. "Likewise, the office will pursue hold departure orders for the respondents so as to preserve the integrity of the case in court," Clavano said. A court division will determine whether there is probable cause to merit an arrest warrant.

- Filipino visa fixer gets 18 months for fraudulent US work permit scheme (2026-05-28 06:28)

SAIPAN, Northern Mariana Islands — A Filipino was sentenced to 18 months in prison by a US federal court in the Northern Mariana Islands after admitting to a scheme that fraudulently secured work permits for undocumented migrants in the US territory. The US Attorney's Office for the Districts of Guam and the Northern Mariana Islands said 56-year-old Venerando Aquino Martin was sentenced on May 27 by the US District Court for the Northern Mariana Islands for visa fraud against the United States. The Northern Mariana Islands, more commonly called the CNMI, is a US commonwealth in the western Pacific north of Guam. Saipan, where the case was prosecuted, is the CNMI's capital and home to a large Filipino community working in tourism, construction, health care, and service industries. According to federal prosecutors, Martin submitted around 242 fraudulent Form I-765 applications, or applications for Employment Authorization Documents, between Sept. 23, 2023, and April 9, 2025. An Employment Authorization Document, commonly called an EAD or work permit, allows certain foreign nationals in the United States and its territories to legally work for a specific period. Prosecutors said Martin falsely claimed the applicants qualified for employment authorization under US immigration laws. Authorities said the fraudulent applications resulted in 66 EADs being unlawfully issued. These permits were later used by undocumented migrants to obtain jobs in the CNMI. US Attorney Shawn N. Anderson said the scheme undermined the integrity of the US immigration system. "Martin engaged in fraudulent conduct at every step of his scheme," Anderson said in a statement released by federal authorities. He added that all 66 recipients of the unlawfully issued work permits had their authorizations revoked and are either already in removal proceedings or awaiting deportation cases. "We will aggressively enforce immigration violations to ensure that foreign nationals meet the qualifications of our work visa programs," Anderson said. Homeland Security Investigations Saipan also warned migrants and facilitators against attempting to circumvent US immigration laws. "Visa fraud weakens our immigration system and puts our communities at risk," said CJ Ammons. "We're keeping a close eye on everyone and everything crossing our borders. If you violate our customs or immigration laws, you will face consequences," Ammons added. Aside from the prison term, the court ordered Martin to serve one year of supervised release and pay a mandatory assessment fee of $200. The case was investigated by Homeland Security Investigations Saipan and prosecuted by Assistant US Attorney Garth R. Backe.

- DPWH rushes to restore access in Davao after bridge collapse (2026-05-28 06:18)

MANILA, Philippines — The Department of Public Works and Highways (DPWH) is racing against time to complete a temporary bailey bridge at the collapsed Callawa Bridge 2 in Davao City to immediately restore safe passage for motorists, commuters, and residents. Public Works Secretary Vince Dizon said on Thursday that construction crews have been working continuously following the collapse of the bridge on May 19, 2026 which severely disrupted transportation and daily activities in the area. President Ferdinand R. Marcos Jr. has ordered the DPWH to fast-track the repair and rehabilitation of the damaged infrastructure to ease the hardship being experienced by affected communities. Residents were forced to cross the river manually and climb using ropes after the bridge gave way, highlighting the urgent need for an alternative route. The temporary Bailey bridge is expected to serve as an emergency crossing while authorities prepare for the full reconstruction of the damaged structure. A Bailey bridge is a portable, pre-fabricated steel bridge designed for rapid deployment during emergencies, disasters, and wartime operations. It can be assembled quickly and is commonly used when permanent bridges become impassable. According to Dizon, the temporary structure is being designed to safely accommodate light vehicles, emergency responders, delivery trucks, and pedestrians. The DPWH chief said that authorities have also deployed personnel in the area to assist residents and monitor safety while construction activities continue. The collapse of Callawa Bridge 2 disrupted the movement of goods and people in several communities, affecting workers, students, and small businesses dependent on the route. "Initial assessments indicated that structural damage and continuous heavy use may have contributed to the bridge failure, although a full technical investigation is still ongoing," added Dizon.

- Dela Rosa escape 'related' to Senate shooting - CIDG (2026-05-28 06:15)

MANILA, Philippines — The escape of Sen. Ronald dela Rosa from the Senate on May 14 and the shooting incident in the facility hours earlier were found out to be "related," the Criminal Investigation and Detection Group (CIDG) of the Philippine National Police (PNP) said Thursday. "Let me just say na (that), you know, two incidents po yun (those two incidents), they're related. The investigation is already with the Department of Justice (DOJ) and I do not want to pre-empt the DOJ," Maj. Gen. Robert Alexander A. Morico II told reporters in a briefing at Camp Crame. The chaotic standoff at the Senate was tagged by Dela Rosa's legal team as "grave supervening events" which clearly demonstrate severe threat to the senator's life. Dela Rosa's camp filed a "very urgent" manifestation with the Supreme Court seeking barring the Philippine government from cooperating with the International Criminal Court (ICC) who issued an arrest warrant against the senator for his alleged co-perpetrator role in the Duterte administration's drug war. Morico clarified that the CIDG investigated the Senate shooting and Dela Rosa's escape separately and refused to make conclusions as investigation was still ongoing. "We base our facts on the evidence we get. We investigate the Senate shooting and the escape separately. We investigate the Senate shooting, the escape is also separate," Morico said. "To make conclusions... The CIDG is only relegated to make investigative support," Morico added.

- Marcos: PH, Japan eye 'comprehensive strategic partnership' (2026-05-28 05:36)

MANILA, Philippines — President Ferdinand Marcos Jr. said the Philippines and Japan would pursue a higher tier diplomatic engagement through a "comprehensive strategic partnership" amid geopolitical tensions and energy supply disruptions. Speaking before members of the Japanese House of Councilors in Tokyo, Japan on Wednesday, Marcos said the planned elevation of ties reflects the "exceptional level of trust" between the two nations and their shared commitment to addressing regional and global challenges. "For the Philippines, and I believe for Japan as well, this moment calls not for retreat nor hesitation, but for deeper engagement with one another and with like-minded partners around the world," Marcos said. "It is in this context that the Philippines and Japan are moving to elevate our relations to a Comprehensive Strategic Partnership, the highest tier in our diplomatic framework, and a first for the Philippines," he added.

- Marcos witnesses signing of MOUs in fintech, digital innovation between PH, Japan (2026-05-28 04:46)

MANILA, Philippines — President Ferdinand Marcos Jr. witnessed the signing of landmark collaborations between the Philippines and Japan which will give his administration's digitalization initiative a major push. With the Philippines becoming a major and trusted hub for digital innovation, financial technology, and smart urban development, several Memoranda of Understanding between the Ayala Group and leading Japanese companies in Tokyo were forged during Marcos' state visit to Japan. The agreements with Mitsubishi Corporation, MUFG Bank, and KDDI Corporation advance collaboration in intelligent city solutions, digital finance, marketing technology, and AI-driven infrastructure, highlighting strong Japanese investor confidence in the Philippines and opening new opportunities for innovation-led growth, financial inclusion, and smarter, more connected communities for Filipinos. The intelligent cities initiative will have Makati City as a jump-off point, and will center on how to make AI-powered systems, urban data platforms, smart mobility, connectivity, and digital city services effectively integrate into the lives of citizens. Meanwhile, the MOU between Ayala Corporation and Mitsubishi Corporation will explore how to further expand the use of digital wallet GCash. The possible areas of cooperation include loyalty and rewards programs, ticketing platforms, digital commerce, customer engagement tools, and digital marketing technologies. It likewise will be integrated into Ayala and Mitsubishi's ecosystems across real estate, retail, energy, and mobility to advance financial inclusion while also aiming to enhance GCash's digital finance services among them lending, payments, wealth management, and other digital services. Separately, Japanese firms, in a business roundtable led by Marcos, also pledged to invest around $3.4 billion, or around P210 billion in the Philippines. This, as the president reiterates that the Philippines "is open, ready, and highly capable of supporting the rapid expansion and resilience of Japanese global value chains."

- 'Jangmi' likely to enter PAR later later today; Pagasa sees rainy season either first or second week of June (2026-05-28 01:51)

MANILA, Philippines – The rainy season may take place either on the first or second week of June, the chief of the state-run weather agency said on Thursday. “At present, the isolated and scattered rains that we experience while we are still under dry season are due to the localized thunderstorms but we are now transitioning to rainy season,” Nathaniel Servando, administrator of the Philippine Atmospheric Geophysical and Astronomical Services Administration (Pagasa), told The Manila Times. Meanwhile, Servando said the tropical storm called "Jangmi" (international name) would likely enter the Philippine Area of Responsibility later in the day as a severe tropical storm and would be called "Domeng," the fourth storm to hit the archipelago in 2026. “It is forecast to reach typhoon category but is unlikely affect the weather conditions. It also has a remote chance to make landfall,” the Pagasa chief said. Its trough or extension, however, has already been affecting some areas in Mindanao, he added. The southwesterly wind flow – which brings warm, moist air from the southwest across the country – has been prevailing over Western Visayas, Negros Island Region, Zamboanga Peninsula, SOCCSKSARGEN (South Cotabato, Cotabato, Sultan Kudarat, Sarangani and General Santos), BARMM (Bangsamoro Autonomous Region in Muslim Mindanao), Lanao del Norte, Misamis Occidental, and Palawan in Luzon, the national weather bureau said. Metro Manila and the rest of the country will be experiencing partly cloudy to overcast skies with isolated downpours or thunderstorms due to the localized thunderstorms, according to its latest advisory.

• For one Ukrainian war amputee, rebuilding is painful after a Russian strike killed her husband (2026-05-27 20:06)

KRYVYI RIH, Ukraine — After Iryna Nakonechna lost her left leg last year in a Russian missile attack that also killed her husband, the Ukrainian woman decided everything tied to her former self had to go. She cut off her dark wavy hair and removed furniture, clothes, trinkets and photographs from her home. Just one reminder of her previous life remained: a portrait of herself and her husband, Serhii Nakonechnyi. Shedding her old identity was necessary, she said, to endure the painful reinvention required to build a life with a prosthetic. Today, Nakonechna is quick-witted and effervescent, her laughter loud and sudden. She wears a pixie haircut and bold red cat-eye glasses, and knits small toy capybaras — an animal that has become an unofficial symbol among amputees in Ukraine. But beneath the sparkle in her eyes lies a grief woven into the painful process of becoming someone new. It's an often unspoken reality beneath the narratives of resilience surrounding the tens of thousands of people in Ukraine who have lost limbs in the war that began more than four years ago when Russia launched a full-scale invasion. “The hardest thing was accepting myself with these injuries, wounds that are not only physical,” she said. “Coming to terms with how much my life has changed has been very difficult.” The exact number of war amputees in Ukraine is unknown, but it continues to rise as landmines, artillery, and missile and drone strikes inflict catastrophic injuries on soldiers and civilians. The increase has fueled an expansion of rehabilitation and prosthetics services, while also reshaping Ukrainian society. Prosthetic limbs have become increasingly visible and powerful symbols of survival and defiance. Nakonechna, 50, still walks with a limp and uses a cane as she learns to trust the prosthetic that reaches her upper thigh. The airstrike also left her with limited mobility in her arms, making it difficult to lift heavy objects. Walking with confidence The next step in Nakonechna's rehabilitation is learning to walk without a cane, her physical therapist, Anastasiia Stetsenko, said. She must not only build her strength, but also her confidence. She must trust herself through movements most people take for granted: climbing stairs, squatting to pick something up, navigating uneven streets, or chasing after her 2-year-old grandson at the playground. Nakonechna's weekly hourlong sessions with Stetsenko begin with removing her prosthetic and resting it against the wall. Then, Stetsenko has Nakonechna lift a plastic bar while seated, timing the movement to her breathing. "You are a demon," Nakonechna says to Stetsenko, when the exercises become taxing. Later, Stetsenko has Nakonechna lie back and rotate her amputated limb in slow circles, testing the limits of her range of motion. "This feels like an extreme sport," Nakonechna jokes. Finally, Stetsenko suggests she squat while gripping a ballet barre, one of the hardest movements for her to relearn. "I will respond as my grandson would," Nakonechna says. "Just no." The two women break into peals of laughter, sounding more like old friends than therapist and patient. The day of the attack The attack happened on March 5, 2025. After dinner, Nakonechna and her husband took advantage of unseasonably warm spring weather with an evening stroll. They were near the entrance of hotel in central Kryvyi Rih when a Russian missile tore through the building, hurling them in opposite directions. Her ears rang as her husband, now several meters away, screamed. She pushed herself upright and felt her left shoulder crunch. The bones were broken. She reached for her left leg but couldn't feel it. The couple ended up at different hospitals. Her husband died the next day. "I never got to say goodbye," Nakonechna said. "I wasn't even at the funeral." Over the next two months, the days dissolved into a blur as Nakonechna underwent two surgeries a week. By May of that year, she could finally sit up again. She felt relieved, she said, but it was only the beginning. A new life The apartment Nakonechna once shared with her husband is now almost unrecognizable. "I had to get rid of everything from the past," she said. "And focus on living my life, even if it was half the life I had before." Nakonechna invited her 77-year-old mother, who has dementia, to move in with her. At lunch, her mother carefully sets a pot of borscht on the table. Nakonechna said such tasks are no longer easy for her. She laments that she still cannot lift her grandson, Tymofii. One day, the boy placed a sticker of a cartoon capybara wearing a prosthetic leg onto her own prosthetic. She left it there. A meticulous craftswoman, she later began knitting toy capybaras through Superhumans, a modern war-trauma center specializing in prosthetics and rehabilitation. During the war, veterans started putting the toys and stickers of the fuzzy, playful animals on their limbs to put strangers at ease. The capybara has since come to symbolize resilience and the determination to reclaim joy after devastation. Nakonechna's toys quickly became popular, and she spends hours knitting them. Her favorite part is assembling the pieces at the end, when the toy becomes whole. "When I count the stitches, I think only about the stitches, not about the life that could have been and unfortunately is not," Nakonechna said. Recently, she marked a personal victory: For the first time since her injury, she wore shorts. The small act marked a powerful shift. "I accepted myself as I am," she said.

• A bitter Eid al-Adha in Mali's capital as al-Qaida-linked blockade sends sheep prices soaring (2026-05-27 20:04)

BAMAKO, Mali — As Muslims around the world prepare to celebrate Eid al-Adha, the feast of sacrifice, the holiday carries a bitter edge in Mali's capital. A blockade by armed groups linked to al-Qaida has sent sheep prices soaring and put the central ritual of slaughtering an animal and sharing its meat with the poor beyond the reach of many families. The shortage and high prices are largely due to a blockade of Bamako announced earlier this month by fighters from Jama'at Nusrat al-Islam wal-Muslimin, an al-Qaida-linked group. The militants regularly attack convoys of trucks and vehicles transporting goods to the capital, often setting them ablaze. Landlocked Mali depends heavily on fuel and goods trucked in from coastal neighbors like Senegal and Ivory Coast. The militants' blockade is designed to strangle the country's economy and undermine the military government's legitimacy, analysts say. The blockade is not total, as the armed groups avoid holding roadblocks for long, fearing retaliation from the Malian army, and goods continue to trickle into Bamako, staving off an outright food shortage for now. Nonetheless, it has driven up prices for some goods like meat and led to fuel shortages, forcing residents to line up at the few gas stations still selling fuel. Since September 2025, the group had already enforced a stifling road blockade on oil imports. Mountaga Touré, 38, a teacher, said he visited several livestock markets before ultimately giving up on buying a sheep for the feast, saying the price of sheep has almost doubled since the blockade was announced. "The small sheep that used to cost $177 are now $266 or more," Touré said. In some neighborhoods of Bamako, residents have swapped the traditional sheep for cows, pooling money to purchase one so they can have meat during the important Muslim holiday in West Africa. The blockade follows sweeping, coordinated attacks by separatist and jihadi forces across Mali last month, the largest in the country in over a decade. Mali has been plagued by insurgencies fought by militants affiliated with al-Qaida and the Islamic State group, as well as a separatist rebellion in the country's north for over a decade. Following a 2020 military coup, the ruling junta turned from Western allies to Russia for help combating Islamic militants. But the security situation has worsened in recent times, analysts say, with a record number of attacks by militants. Government forces and Russian mercenaries have also been accused of killing civilians they suspect of collaborating with militants. The Malian army and its Russian Africa Corps mercenaries are circumventing the blockade by escorting convoys of trucks carrying goods and fuel to supply markets in Bamako. The military also regularly says it struck positions held by armed groups. But the escorts and strikes have not been enough to adequately supply the capital, residents say. "Usually, I bring up to 200 sheep to Bamako to sell during Tabaski," said Amadou Cissé, 45, a livestock trader specializing in Eid sheep, using the West African word for the holiday. "But this year I barely brought 50 because there is not enough space in army-escorted trucks." Cissé said the sheep he ordered are still in Diema, a town some 345 km (215 miles) west of Bamako, where many animals bound for the capital originate. "I was told more escorted convoys would be organized, but so far none have left Diema, so I doubt the sheep will arrive before the holiday," he said. Drissa Traoré, who has been selling sheep in Bamako for over a decade, said supply has dropped significantly recently. "This year, we have barely half the number of sheep we usually have during Tabaski,” he said. The insecurity has also affected the travel plans of many. Sidi Diarra, an employee at a major financial institution in Bamako, said he usually celebrates the holiday with his parents in Segou, around 240 km (150 miles) from the capital. “This year, I am afraid to go because of attacks by extremist groups. It is safer to stay in Bamako,” he said.

• Berlin police arrest man suspected of being an accomplice to Holocaust Memorial stabbing (2026-05-27 19:24)

BERLIN — An alleged accomplice of a man who was convicted of stabbing and seriously wounding a Spanish tourist at Berlin's Holocaust Memorial last year was arrested in the German capital on Wednesday. The Syrian national, identified only as Khalaf A. in line with German privacy rules, is suspected of being an accessory to attempted murder and bodily harm, federal prosecutors said in a statement. They said that he spent the afternoon before the attack on Feb. 21, 2025, with the man convicted of the stabbing, Wassim Al M., and encouraged him to carry out his plan. Wassim Al M., also a Syrian citizen, was convicted in March on charges including attempted murder and attempted membership in a foreign terrorist organization. He was sentenced to 13 years in prison. The Berlin district court found that he traveled from Leipzig to Berlin to carry out an attack in the name of the Islamic State group. He chose the Holocaust Memorial because "he believed he would find people of Jewish faith there," presiding judge Doris Husch said at the time, and he stabbed the Spanish tourist in the throat before shouting “Allahu akbar,” or “God is great.” The Memorial to the Murdered Jews of Europe, a field of 2,700 gray concrete slabs near the Brandenburg Gate in the heart of Berlin, honors the 6 million Jews killed in the Holocaust. The stabbing took place two days before a German national election in which migration became a central issue, pushed to the forefront by a string of deadly attacks involving immigrants in the months before the vote.

- Median pay for CEOs rose nearly 6% in 2025, but some compensation packages were eye-popping (2026-05-27 18:53)

NEW YORK — The typical CEO compensation package rose nearly 6% in 2025 to $17.7 million, as company boards rewarded their top executives for bigger profits and higher stock prices, and gave them incentives to stick around and make even more money for shareholders. The median employee at companies in the S&P 500 earned $89,744, reflecting a 4.7% increase year over year. While that gain outpaced the rate of inflation in 2025, many workers were still feeling pinched by the accumulation of higher prices over the past few years and had to cut corners to make ends meet and run up credit card debt to pay for everyday necessities. The Associated Press’ CEO compensation survey, which uses data analyzed for The AP by Equilar, included pay data for 337 executives at S&P 500 companies who have served at least two full consecutive fiscal years at their companies, which filed proxy statements between Jan. 1 and April 30. Here’s a look at some highlights from the survey. The pay gap At half the companies in AP’s survey it would take the worker at the middle of the company’s pay scale 200 years to make what the CEO did in one, up from 192 years in last year’s survey. Companies have been required to disclose this so-called pay ratio since 2018. While the biggest gaps occur at companies where the CEO received compensation loaded with one-time awards of stock, the pay ratio also tends to be highest at companies in industries where wages are typically low. For instance, at Coca-Cola, its CEO earned nearly 1,739 times the median pay of $17,947 for its workers. The CEO at the retailer TJX Cos. makes about 1,774 times what a worker making the company’s median pay does. Sarah Anderson, who directs the Global Economy Project at the progressive Institute for Policy Studies, noted in an email that there are ballot initiative campaigns in San Francisco and Los Angeles to raise taxes on companies with sizable gaps between CEO and worker pay. “At a time when working families are struggling with rising costs, it’s obscene to see CEO pay continuing to skyrocket,” Anderson wrote. Overall, wages and benefits netted by private-sector workers in the U.S. rose 3.4% through 2025, according to the Labor Department. The average worker in the U.S. makes $67,000 a year. That figure rises to $96,000 when benefits such as health care and other insurance are included. The nature of CEO pay While many people may think of a pay package as consisting of salary, bonus and some perks, those components make up only a small percentage of pay for the modern CEO. Many companies have heeded calls from shareholders to tie CEO compensation more closely to performance. As a result, a large proportion of pay packages consist of stock awards, which the CEO often can’t cash in for years, if at all, unless the company meets certain targets, typically a higher stock price or market value or improved operating profits. And if the CEO delivers on those metrics, companies often give them one-time rewards as incentives to stay on and not look for a bigger payday elsewhere. Shareholders can weigh in on a CEO's pay package through "say on pay" votes at a company's annual meeting. But the votes are non-binding and most pay plans pass with overwhelming support. The average "yes" vote at companies in this year's survey was around 90%. Big rewards, lofty goals As CEO pay has grown significantly over the past few decades, criticism of the lofty payouts has largely come from worker advocates and certain members of Congress. Elon Musk's pay package is so extraordinary that even the pope weighed in. Musk, the CEO of Tesla, received compensation valued at $132.3 billion, all in the form of stock awards. To actually get the shares, Musk must meet ambitious targets over the next 10 years for the company's market value and Tesla's electric vehicles, as well as his futuristic goals of developing a fleet of robotaxis and an army of humanoid robots. Tesla did not immediately respond to a request for comment. Shankh Mitra of Welltower received the second-largest compensation package in the survey at $821.1 million, the bulk of it in stock awards. Since October 2020, when he became CEO of the healthcare real estate investment trust, and October 2025, Welltower's stock price tripled. Mitra can only receive the full compensation, beyond a $110,000 annual salary, after a 10-year period. CEO Hock Tan's pay package at Broadcom, valued at $205.3 million, covers the years 2028-2030 — companies assign a value at the time the package is awarded — and is tied to Tan's ability to greatly increase the revenue Broadcom generates from artificial intelligence, making it one of the few companies at this time to use AI as a benchmark in its compensation plans. "Use of AI considerations or metrics in incentive plans has not yet taken hold as a majority practice," said Kelly Malafis, founding partner at Compensation Advisory Partners, in an email, although she expects that could change going forward. David Zaslav was at the center of a takeover battle that ended with him selling Warner Bros. to Paramount Skydance for $31 a share, up from $12.54 before reports of Paramount's interest in a deal came out. For negotiating the deal at a premium and also exceeding certain financial and strategic goals, Warner gave Zaslav a pay package valued at $165 million, fourth largest in the survey. Since becoming CEO in 2007, Zaslav's compensation has totaled $1.1 billion, according to Equilar. Big payouts for bankers CEOs of three of the nation's biggest banks got rewarded for yearslong efforts to retool their companies and revive a stagnant stock price. Goldman Sachs' David Solomon's pay package totaled almost $119 million — including stock valued at $80 million he can receive after five years. Goldman's board pointed to the 57% gain in the company's shares, as well as a hefty increase in its earnings per share. Solomon also sold off the company's Apple Card portfolio after an unsuccessful effort to expand Goldman's consumer-focused business. Jane Fraser of Citigroup received a pay package valued at $95.8 million — tops among the 27 women CEOs in this year's survey and the highest-ever for a woman CEO in the survey's history. Fraser received a one-time award valued at $25 million in restricted stock and options after being elected Citi's chairman. She also got a one-time award for overseeing a wholesale reorganization of Citi into a leaner company, including laying off thousands of workers. Overall, the median compensation for women CEOs in the survey fell 2.6% to $18.1 million, compared to a 6.4% increase for their male counterparts to $17.7 billion. Wells Fargo gave CEO Charles Scharf a pay package worth $94.5 million after his yearslong effort to lead the bank back from a scandal involving fake bank accounts that landed

Wells under federal supervision. And new scandals emerged along the way. The Federal Reserve finally let Wells leave the penalty box last year. Other notables In his last year as CEO of the conglomerate Berkshire Hathaway, Warren Buffett received compensation worth $389,488 — down 4% from the year prior. Meta Platforms CEO Mark Zuckerberg's compensation was valued at $25.1 million and almost all of it involved costs for the company to provide security for him and his family, as well as the use of corporate aircraft. Jensen Huang of Nvidia, the most valuable publicly traded company, got a pay package valued at $36.3 million. He didn't make the AP survey because Nvidia filed its proxy after April 30.

BANGKOK — Five villagers who became trapped in a flooded cave in central Laos more than a week ago have been found alive by divers who discovered them sitting on a rock in the darkness, rescuers said Wednesday, but two others are still missing. The seven villagers entered the cave in Xaisomboun province on May 19, but heavy rain triggered flash flooding that blocked the exit, according to Lao and Thai rescue teams involved in the operation. Thai rescuer Chakkit Taengtang posted video of himself in the cave saying divers were delivering food and water to the five and planning to extract them as soon as possible. All of the villagers are men, according to a Facebook post by the Lao group Rescue Volunteer for People. “I’m still shaking. Our team made it happen,” Bounkham Luanglath, a member of the Lao rescue team, said in a voice message to The Associated Press. He said the search for the missing would continue. A video posted by the rescue group appeared to show the moment divers emerged from the water and discovered the trapped men. In the footage, the men are wearing headlamps and sitting on a rock surrounded by floodwater. Other videos showed rescuers inside and outside the cave cheering, jumping and hugging each other in joy after the discovery. Another villager who went into the cave with the seven was able to escape when the flooding began, and he raised the alarm about the trapped men. Rescue workers from neighboring Thailand arrived at the site over the weekend. Those helping out included several divers who took part in the complicated 2018 rescue in northern Thailand of 12 schoolboys and their soccer coach who were trapped for more than two weeks in a cave. Miiko Paasi, a Thai-based Finnish diving instructor who participated in the rescue of the schoolboys and joined the search effort in Laos, said in a social media post that the men were “healthy and in good spirits,” but he warned that the extraction would not be easy. The cave is in a rugged, remote area in Xaisomboun province’s Longcheng district, about 120 kilometers (75 miles) north of the capital, Vientiane. Rescuers have detailed on social media the challenging mountainous terrain and heavy rain that has hampered their work. Videos shared online by Thai rescuers showed that reaching the cave’s entrance requires a steep hike of roughly 4 kilometers (2.5 miles). The entrance is also steep and rocky and barely wide enough for a single person. It’s not clear why the villagers went into the cave. Bounkham has said that the cave was frequented by local residents looking for gold, despite repeated warnings about safety.

- Climbers meet in Nepal to discuss the challenges of scaling Mount Everest (2026-05-27 18:31)

KATHMANDU, Nepal — Hundreds of climbers, mountaineers and officials gathered in Kathmandu on Wednesday to discuss the risks of scaling Mount Everest at a time of warming temperatures and as a surge in climbers creates new challenges, including the garbage they leave behind. The “Everest Summiters Summit” in Nepal’s capital was held during what is believed to be the most crowded season ever on the world’s highest peak, with hundreds of climbers and their Sherpa guides scaling the 8,849-meter (29,032-foot) peak in just a few days this month. A growing number of climbers Nepal issued a record 494 permits for foreign climbers this season, with the number of people who reached the summit believed to be more than 900. That would be the highest number to ever reach the summit during the spring climbing season. The final official number will be available only later. A sherpa guide who recently achieved the a record of the most ascents — 32 — warned that the numbers are creating problems. “Nepal should only allow no more than 250 climbers that are issued permit to climb from the Nepal side,” Kami Rita Sherpa said. “It will be good if the government was to limit the number.” In recent times photos shared from the mountain have shown lines of hundreds of climbers stuck in traffic jams, clipped to fixed ropes and waiting for the chance to reach the summit. Keeping Mount Everest clean With hundreds of climbers, their guides and workers, there are some 3,000 people living on Mount Everest during the climbing season, which ends this month. It has remained a challenge to remove all their waste when tents are pulled down. There are strict government rules requiring climbers to remove their garbage but much gets left behind anyway. Climbers say keeping the mountain pristine should remain a priority. “We should take the rubbish from the mountain and we should protect our Himalayas,” said He Jing, a renowned Chinese climber. Climbing is tougher than what appears on social media Currently anyone can apply for permit as long as they pay $15,000 to the government as a permit fee. But now the Nepalese government is working on new regulations requiring them to have experience. Nathaniel Douglas, a climber from Seattle, told The Associated Press on the sidelines of the conference that he sees people who have never climbed a mountain who hope to scale Everest after seeing images on social media. “So they really don’t understand what mountaineering is, like what it actually takes to summit Mount Everest and get back down safely,” he said. Warmer weather means added risks British mountaineer Adriana Brownlee, the youngest woman to climb all 14 highest peaks, said the weather on the mountains was getting warmer, increasing the risks for climbers. “Every year the (Khumbu) Icefall seems more unstable because of global warming,” she said. adding that water underneath is melting faster, causing the seracs — blocks of ice — to fall much easier because of the movement underneath. A huge serac hanging dangerously over the route just above the base camp forced climbers to delay their climb last month.

- ICC sets June 23, July 14 for next Duterte case status conferences (2026-05-27 18:09)

MANILA, Philippines -- The International Criminal Court (ICC) has scheduled the next two status conferences on the case against former president Rodrigo Duterte for June 23 and July 14, as judges intensify preparations for trial and impose strict procedural deadlines. The scheduling comes as the ICC Trial Chamber III, led by Presiding Judge Joanna Korner, continues managing pre-trial proceedings alongside firm directions on hearings, disclosure, and evidence handling, while also urging continuous hearings through to the Christmas recess, subject to medical findings. During procedural directions, Korner said the court should be prepared to sit on a continuous basis until the end-of-year recess, depending on the outcome of updated medical assessments on Duterte's fitness to stand trial. She stressed that trial scheduling remains contingent on medical findings, which will also determine whether adjustments are needed to the pace and structure of hearings. Tight hearing structure and interpretation planning judges directed the ICC Registry to ensure interpretation services will be available for opening statements, even if full interpreter capacity for witness testimony is not yet in place. The court emphasized the importance of making opening remarks accessible to all parties and observers, given the multilingual nature of expected proceedings. Strict disclosure and evidence deadlines The chamber set a detailed timetable for filings leading up to trial. The prosecution must submit its provisional witness and evidence list by June 29, followed by its final trial brief, final witness list, and full evidence inventory by Aug. 31. The same Aug. 31 deadline applies to any new incidents, expert reports, or additional evidence, with late submissions allowed only in exceptional cases and requiring strong justification and judicial approval. On the defense side, the court set an Oct. 30 deadline for the indication of issues to be raised at trial, while the victims' legal representative must submit its trial brief by Sept. 28. Pre-trial motions are also due by Aug. 31 unless urgent. Evidence management concerns Judges warned against the risk of excessive or repetitive documentary submissions that could overwhelm proceedings. The prosecution is currently reviewing more than 600 documentary items and is expected to significantly narrow its evidentiary package before trial. The chamber emphasized that only relevant and probative materials should be presented, signaling stricter judicial scrutiny of documentary and video evidence. Conduct of proceedings and procedural framework Parties were given until June 5 to propose amendments to the procedural framework governing the conduct of trial. While the ICC indicated it would generally follow the established Al-Rahman case model, judges said key evidentiary decisions may be made at the time documents are tendered in court, rather than through broad pre-admission of evidence. The chamber also encouraged both prosecution and defense to agree on as many factual issues as possible to streamline trial proceedings and reduce contested matters. Next steps The June 23 and July 14 status conferences are expected to further refine procedural arrangements as the ICC moves closer to the anticipated start of the Nov. 30 trial proceedings, with timelines and structure still subject to medical assessments and ongoing disclosure compliance.

• Marcos vows closer PH-Japan cooperation for peace in Indo-Pacific (2026-05-27 16:38)

PHILIPPINES — President Ferdinand Marcos Jr. reaffirmed the Philippines' commitment to fostering stronger ties with Japan towards a strategic partnership that will also benefit the Indo-Pacific region. Marcos' remarks came during the State Banquet hosted by Emperor Naruhito and Empress Masako at the Imperial Palace. There, he underscored the longstanding friendship between Manila and Tokyo that has evolved into one of the “most vibrant and forward-looking partnerships” in the region, anchored on shared values, mutual trust, and a common vision for peace, prosperity, and development. “The Philippines remains committed to working closely with Japan to harness our intensifying strategic partnership as a force for good not only for our two countries, but also for the broader Indo-Pacific region,” he said Wednesday night. “Together, we reaffirm our unwavering dedication to peace and a rules-based order governed by international law, ensuring stability, prosperity, and dignity for future generations,” he said. The Philippines-Japan relations, he further stated, were molded not only by governments, but also by generations of Filipinos and Japanese who chose “understanding over difference, friendship over division, and partnership over isolation.” He likewise recognized Japan as among the Philippines’ most valued partners in development, infrastructure, security, connectivity, agriculture, and resilience. “Whether in seasons of abundance and hardship, Japan has consistently stood shoulder-to-shoulder with the Filipino people, extending solidarity and assistance at the right moments to reassure us that we have a friend we can always count on,” he said. Earlier, Their Majesties welcomed the president and first lady in a State Call and conferred to them Grand Cordon of the Supreme Order of the Chrysanthemum and Grand Cordon of the Order of the Precious Crown, respectively. Hosting a state visit is a rare honor extended by Japan to select foreign leaders, with Marcos being only the third world leader that the Emperor has received on since his accession to the throne in 2019.

- Police, NBI raid fails to nab wanted senator (2026-05-27 16:10)

POLICE on Wednesday said they are filing an obstruction of justice complaint against Sen. Robinhood Padilla and several others for helping the fugitive Sen. Ronald “Bato” Dela Rosa slip out of the Senate building on May 14 following a shooting incident there. In a statement, the Criminal Investigation and Detection Group (CIDG) of the Philippine National Police (PNP) said it has “officially concluded that the transport of Senator Dela Rosa was not a mere hitched ride on Senator Padilla’s car, but a highly coordinated, preplanned logistical maneuver specifically executed to avoid detection while escaping the Senate premises in the dawn of May 14, 2026.” Investigation further revealed that another vehicle tailing Padilla’s car served as a security escort and backup car during the maneuver. The CIDG said the legal action was in line with its mandate to conduct investigation and enforce the law equitably and without exception. “When individuals actively interfere in the arrest or assist in the evasion of criminal offenders to avoid prosecution, it undermines the justice system and compromises public order,” the CIDG said. It emphasized that “any act of obstruction of justice will be met with criminal prosecution.” On Tuesday, the Department of Justice said it was studying Padilla’s admission on how Dela Rosa was able to leave Senate premises. Justice Secretary Fredrick Vida said Padilla’s own admissions were already enough for him to be investigated. Padilla, a staunch supporter of Dela Rosa and the Duterte clan, previously said the senator hitched a ride with him after the shooting because he was worried his presence endangered the safety of everyone there. Padilla said he dropped off Dela Rosa in Makati, without knowing where he was headed next. Angeles raid Earlier on Wednesday, police and National Bureau of Investigation (NBI) agents raided a house in a subdivision in Barangay Balibago, Angeles City, Pampanga, where Dela Rosa was allegedly hiding but did not find him there. Reports said the home was allegedly owned by the uncle of Padilla. The CIDG, however, has yet to release any information about the operation. Authorities said the operation stemmed from intelligence reports saying the property was being used as a possible hideout for Dela Rosa, who is wanted by the International Criminal Court for crimes against humanity in relation to the Duterte administration's bloody war on drugs, which he headed as national police chief. Barangay Balibago chairman Joseph Ponce, in an interview, said authorities coordinated with him around 5:30 a.m. before carrying out the operation at a house inside Diamond Subdivision owned by a certain Lakay Cariño, whom he identified as Padilla's maternal uncle. Authorities were also reportedly searching for a pickup truck, also allegedly owned by Cariño, that was said to have been used as a backup vehicle during Dela Rosa's escape from the Senate premises on May 13 shortly after the shooting there. Barangay Balibago officials including barangay kagawad Ednel Batac, EXO Elmer Samson and members of the Barangay Peacekeeping Action Team witnessed the operation. "At around 6 a.m., authorities barged into the home of Lakay Cariño because of the suspicion that Senator Bato was there." Cariño reportedly left for Manila days before the raid. He serves as Ponce's security consultant and is also president of the senior citizens group in Barangay Balibago. Around 6:30 a.m., about 16 vehicles carrying CIDG, NBI and PNP personnel were seen leaving the subdivision, he added. "Everything was orderly and there was no chaos. The raid was early and the residents of Diamond Residence Subdivision helped," Ponce said in Filipino. The CIDG has yet to issue any update regarding the operation. Gun licenses revoked Meanwhile, the Philippine National Police Firearms and Explosives Office (PNP-FEO) revoked the firearms licenses registered under Dela Rosa's name. The revocation order was signed by FEO chief Brig. Gen. Jose Manalad Jr. On Tuesday, the FEO said the law governing firearms says an applicant for a gun license should not have been convicted or have a pending criminal case before any court of law for a crime that is punishable by a penalty of more than two years. Dela Rosa's lawyer, Israelito Torreón, argued that Dela Rosa was not an applicant, so there was no basis to cancel his gun licenses. Another section of the law says a person can lose his license if he has been convicted of a crime, or if a court orders the revocation. "Senator Dela Rosa has been convicted of nothing. No Philippine court has issued any order against him," Torreón said. The PNP on Wednesday assured the public that no special treatment will be accorded to Dela Rosa amid talk that police officers would treat the lawmaker with kid gloves because of his decadeslong service in law enforcement. PNP chief Gen. Jose Melencio Nartatez Jr. said the police force remains bound by law and will perform its mandate "without fear or favor." "While our ranks maintain an institutional respect for Sen. Bato Dela Rosa as a former PNP chief, we assure the public that there will be no special treatment," Nartatez said. "Our personnel will execute all lawful directives with absolute professionalism, impartiality and transparency."

- Impeach prosecutors seek earlier trial date (2026-05-27 16:09)

THE House of Representatives' prosecution team for the impeachment trial of Vice President Sara Duterte has appealed to the Senate to reconsider the trial's tentative July 6 timetable. "In our view, July 6 is kind of far off. The Constitution is very clear that the impeachment trial shall proceed forthwith," Lanao del Sur 1st District Rep. Zia Alonto Adiong, one of the spokesmen of the prosecutors, said in Filipino and English on Wednesday. "The Senate has every right to prepare, but we also hope the process moves as promptly as possible in the interest of public accountability and public trust," he said. Also, Alonto Adiong appreciated the minority senators opposing the proposal to allow online participation in the Senate's plenary sessions. "We fully respect the Senate as an independent institution, but we strongly believe that impeachment proceedings require personal presence, personal accountability and full attention from every senator-judge," Alonto Adiong said. "There is no... extraordinary situation today that will justify online participation, especially while the impeachment trial is nearing," Alonto Adiong said. "We appreciate those who stood firm in defending the integrity and solemnity of the institution and the impeachment process. It is important that the public's trust for our institutions is maintained," he said. "This is not an ordinary period in the Senate. Once senators sit as judges in an impeachment court, the Filipino people expect them to be physically present, listening to the evidence and personally performing that constitutional duty," he said. "Impeachment carries enormous constitutional and historical weight. Personal attendance reflects the seriousness, transparency and accountability expected from every senator-judge," he said. On May 12, the House elected the following as impeachment prosecutors: Batangas 2nd District Rep. Gerville Luistro, Bicol Saro Rep. Terry Ridon, 1-Rider Rep. Ramon Rodrigo Gutierrez, San Juan City Rep. Ysabel Maria Zamora, Iloilo 3rd District Rep. Lorenz Defensor, Akbayan Rep. Jose Manuel Diokno, Mamamayang Liberal Rep. Leila de Lima, Dinagat Islands Rep. Kaka Bag-ao, Bukidnon 2nd District Rep. Jonathan Keith Flores, Cagayan de Oro 1st District Rep. Lordan Suan and Manila 3rd District Rep. Joel Chua. This was after the House, voting 257-25 with nine abstentions, impeached Duterte on May 11 over alleged misuse of confidential funds, unexplained wealth allegedly amassed, alleged bribery and her statement about hiring someone to kill President Ferdinand Marcos Jr. if she herself was killed. On May 13, the House sent the articles of impeachment to the Senate. Duterte has a June 1 deadline to file her answer to the impeachment articles. Her defense team has said it will comply. Duterte denied the allegations in the two complaints heard by the Luistro-led House Committee on Justice, but did not attend the hearings. The committee on April 29 found probable cause to impeach her and sent the impeachment articles to the House plenary for action. The impeachment articles seek Duterte's removal from office and lifetime ban from any government position. The impeachment proceedings center on two primary sets of charges: misuse of public funds, and threats and security violations.

- Minority bloc senators may ask Supreme Court to intervene on rules change (2026-05-27 16:08)

SEN. Minority Leader Vicente Sotto III said the minority bloc would seek the Supreme Court's intervention if the majority succeeds in changing the Senate rules to allow electronic voting. Senators in the minority bloc walked out of a contentious session on Tuesday night to express their disgust over the majority's move to rush the changing of rules without exhaustive deliberation. The walkout also enabled Sotto to seek an adjournment, citing the lack of a quorum, a move that staved off Senate President Alan Peter Cayetano's move to force a vote in plenary. "If we are not able to stop it (the change of rules)," said Sotto in a text message on Wednesday when asked if the minority intends to raise the issue before the Supreme Court. "Rules should be followed, not changed for personal reasons," Sotto said in Filipino and English. "Our rules say a change of rules must undergo a day rule, and the rules committee must report out. Why is it that [Sen. Rodante] Marcoleta insists on what is wrong?" Sotto pointed out that the rules committee had not been constituted after the leadership change on May 11, during which he was replaced by Cayetano as Senate president. "There is no [rules committee] chairman. [Sen.] Joel [Villanueva] was [in] acting capacity only. Why will they insist [on changing] the rules when it is obviously just to favor [Senator] Bato and whoever will be charged. That is not our fault," Sotto added, referring to Sen. Ronald Dela Rosa, who is in hiding after the International Criminal Court issued an arrest warrant against him for his role in the Duterte administration's bloody war on drugs. In a joint statement on Tuesday night, the minority bloc said, "We have always welcomed healthy discussions on the floor, but this should mean allowing all members to be heard, not forcing the chamber to move at the speed preferred by the majority." "At the time the motion was taken up, there was no duly constituted Committee on Rules and there was not even an elected majority leader who could properly guide a rules amendment through the regular process," the bloc said. "How could there have been any action or discussion before the Committee on Rules when no Committee on Rules has been organized to date?" they asked. "With due respect, the answer that no Senate rule had been violated does not settle the matter, because the rules cannot be treated as a matter of convenience when the very process for amending them is under serious question," they said. The minority added, "The public deserves to hear it debated openly. If the proposal is truly defensible, then let it pass through the proper route. We owe it to the people who voted for us to do our mandate. This is why we want more time to discuss this further." Sen. Panfilo Lacson said that by staging a walkout on Tuesday evening, the Senate's "Solid Bloc 11" minority bloc showed that retreat can mean victory, especially when the rules are on its side. The group walked out of the plenary to object to the majority bloc's move "to rush" amending the Senate rules to allow voting through videoconferencing. The minority senators questioned the majority bloc's move to tackle and vote in plenary on Marcoleta's motion allowing online participation in Senate proceedings. "Senate minority walkout: we demonstrated how to score a victory by retreating. They may have superior numbers, but we have the rules on our side," Lacson wrote on X on Wednesday. The minority is composed of Senators Sotto, Bam Aquino, JV Ejercito, Sherwin Gatchalian, Risa Hontiveros, Lacson, Lito Lapid, Francis Pangilinan, Erwin Tulfo, Raffy Tulfo and Juan Miguel Zubiri. "In a condescending tone, a colleague, who is a lawyer, took issue with Sen[ator] Hontiveros' lack of 'legal background.' I have a simple message — it's the rules stupid," Lacson said in a separate X post. He was referring to Sen. Rodante Marcoleta, who belittled Hontiveros' lack of legal training. "When they in the majority play dirty, we in the minority will play it smart,” he said. He added that legal training was not relevant to a discussion on the Senate rules. No valid reason. Zubiri on Wednesday said the rules and time-honored tradition of the Senate are that the senators should be present on the floor to conduct business, especially when it comes to voting, regardless of technology available. In a statement on Wednesday, the senator said, “I’m being consistent with my stand on teleconferencing.” Zubiri said when he was the Senate president, he turned down the request of then-senator Bong Revilla to participate in the Senate proceedings through teleconferencing due to a foot injury from an accident. He showed up in the Senate in crutches. “And because of that, many of my colleagues got angry with me and used that as one of the reasons why I was removed from my position,” he said in Filipino. “In fact, [the late] Sen. Miriam [Santiago] did not ask for exemption when she got cancer and just filed a medical leave as she respected the rules of the Senate,” Zubiri said. He said if the minority accepts the majority’s motion, no senator will be physically present on the floor. “And we can all work from home,” Zubiri added. “It will be a mockery of the Senate, and I don’t know of any other major democratic country that allows a work-from-home setup, especially during voting,” he said. Zubiri said the minority will only allow such a setup during a “pandemic or war,” which, he said, is covered by the Senate rules. “That is why I’m against the majority plan,” he said. “It must be condemned.”

Former Senate president Franklin Drilon said the “rude” attempt of the majority bloc to railroad changes in the Senate rules is tied to the coming impeachment trial of Vice President Sara Duterte. The former senator warned against the “tyranny of the majority” after the Senate majority bloc tried to ram through amendments allowing senators to vote remotely, a move that would allow Dela Rosa to vote even as he is in hiding. Drilon said Sen. Erwin Tulfo is correct in calling “a spade a spade” when he pointed out that the amendment is meant to accommodate senators who may soon face detention over alleged plunder cases. “This is ugly. I have never seen this kind of bastusan (rudeness) in the history of the Senate,” Drilon said in a statement on Wednesday. “This is malicious and grave abuse of discretion I have never seen in the history of the Senate. It must be condemned,” he said. Drilon said the move is directly connected to the impending impeachment trial of Duterte and threatens the credibility and independence of the Senate. The amendment could affect crucial rulings during the impeachment proceedings if senators facing detention or hiding from arrest are still allowed to vote remotely. The opposition-led Akbayan Party-list on Wednesday condemned the attempt to railroad amendments to Senate rules, which party president Rafaela David said was a “desperate attempt” by Cayetano to cling to the Senate presidency. “Let’s call it for what it is: ‘fugitive-and-jail voting’ in the Senate.... This is not about technology or efficiency. It is a desperate maneuver by the power-hungry Cayetano to preserve his increasingly fragile grip on the Senate presidency. Its real purpose is to ensure that allies such as internationally wanted fugitive [Sen.] Ronald Dela Rosa can continue participating in Senate voting, while also preparing for the possibility that members of their own bloc may soon face arrest and imprisonment over plunder and other serious corruption charges,” she said. David also called Cayetano a hypocrite, because he never pushed for Senate rule amendments when former senator and now Mamamayang Liberal Rep. Leila de Lima was unjustly jailed during the administration of now-detained former president Rodrigo Duterte. David also called out Sen.

Rodante Marcoleta for belittling Sen. Risa Hontiveros, who is a member of Akbayan, for lacking any legal background. Marcoleta is under a hold departure order by the Sandiganbayan because of a plunder complaint over election campaign contributions totaling P75 million. “Marcoleta’s attack was unparliamentary, but hardly surprising coming from one of the Dutertes’ most loyal political pitbulls,” David said. “He thinks highly of himself as a lawyer, yet failed to declare his campaign donations and even stupidly admitted it on national television. Because of his ‘legal expertise,’ he now faces a solid plunder case,” she added.

- Marcos orders efficient flood control measures (2026-05-27 16:07)

PRESIDENT Ferdinand Marcos Jr. has ordered the Department of Public Works and Highways (DPWH), and other concerned agencies to intensify flood mitigation measures ahead of the expected onset of the rainy season in July. Marcos specifically directed the DPWH to speed up clearing and dredging operations in creeks, rivers, esteros and drainage canals nationwide. The President also ordered the continued widening of waterways under the government’s Oplan Kontra Baha program to improve water flow and minimize flooding in vulnerable communities. Public Works Secretary Vince Dizon said the DPWH remains on full alert and is continuously carrying out anti-flood operations, especially in low-lying and flood-prone areas. Dizon assured the public that clearing and dredging activities will continue without interruption as part of the administration’s preparations for the rainy months. He said the government is determined to reduce the severe flooding that regularly affects many parts of the country during heavy rains and typhoons. Among the priority areas under Oplan Kontra Baha are Metro Manila, where clogged waterways and urban congestion worsen flooding during downpours. The DPWH is also focusing on the Ilocos Region and Cagayan Valley, areas frequently battered by heavy rains and overflowing rivers during the monsoon season. Flood-prone provinces in Central Luzon, including Tarlac, are likewise undergoing intensified clearing and desilting operations. In the Bicol Region, Naga City remains under close monitoring because of its history of severe flooding during prolonged rains. The anti-flood campaign has also been expanded in Visayas, particularly in Cebu, Iloilo and Bacolod, where flooding has repeatedly disrupted communities and businesses. In Mindanao, the government has prioritized Cagayan de Oro and Maguindanao, areas that have suffered from devastating floods in recent years. The Marcos administration said aggressive flood prevention measures are necessary to protect lives, properties and livelihoods as the country braces for another rainy season.

- House finishes nearly half of priority bills (2026-05-27 16:06)

THE House of Representatives announced that it is nearly done with half of the priority measures of the administration of President Ferdinand Marcos Jr., a few days before adjournment. In Tuesday’s plenary session, the House approved on second reading five of the Legislative-Executive Development Advisory Council (Ledac) priority measures. These measures were still subject to voting on third reading, which is expected before the session adjourns on Wednesday. The legislation includes House Bill (HB) 9257, which aims to strengthen the Bases Conversion and Development Authority; HB 9297, or the proposed right to information law; HB 9461, or the proposed Child Online Safety and Protection Act; HB 9465, or the proposed Act Prohibiting the Deliberate Dissemination of False Information that Poses Verifiable Public Harm or Serious Threat to National Security, Establishing Digital Platform Accountability and Transparency Mechanisms, and Promoting Media and Digital Literacy; and HB 9466, or Converting the National Feeding Program into a National Nutrition Program.” While we near the adjournment of session, the House’ s commitment to maximize the time left to push forward proposed laws that are important to the lives of our countrymen is clear,” Speaker Faustino Dy III said in Filipino and English in a statement.” We are focused on being productive and maximizing the remaining session days. While there is time, we continue to perform the job and mandate entrusted to us by the Filipino people,” Dy said. Among the 20 Leduc priority measures that the House has already approved on third and final reading were the National Center for Geriatric Health law, which is under deliberation by a bicameral panel; amendments to the Pantawid Pamilyang Pilipino Program Law; amendments to the Government Assistance to Students and Teachers in Private Education Act; Assistance to Individuals in Crisis Situations Act; extension of the estate tax amnesty period; Department of Water Resources law; travel tax abolition; amendments to the Universal Access to Quality Tertiary Education Act; and amendments to the Biofuels Act. Included in the Leduc priority measures were the resetting of the first regular elections in the Bangsamoro Autonomous Region in Muslim Mindanao (already law), the proposed National Land Use Act, proposed amendments to the Electric Power Industry Reform Act which seek to strengthen the Energy Regulatory Commission, a proposed Waste-to-Energy Act, proposed amendments to the National Building Code, proposed Blue Economy Act, proposed amendments to the Teachers Professionalization Act, proposed amendments to the Bank Deposits Secrecy Law, proposed Digital Payments Act and the Presidential Scholarship Program bill.

- Senator Imee Marcos calls for thorough probe of anomalous flood control projects (2026-05-27 16:05)

SEN. Imee Marcos on Wednesday called for a wider, evidence-driven investigation into alleged irregularities in government flood control projects as she stressed that accountability should proceed regardless of political affiliation or personal ties. Investigators must pursue the truth wherever the evidence leads, even if it involves allies or relatives, she said at the Pandesal Forum hosted by newspaper columnist and Kamuning Bakery and Café owner Wilson Lee Flores. “If it’ s my relative, my cousin, my sibling, my nephew, then so be it — we can’ t do anything about it. We really have to follow the evidence,” she said, emphasizing that no one should be exempt from scrutiny. Stressing that the focus should be on identifying those who allegedly ordered the projects rather than limiting responsibility to implementers, the eldest sister of President Ferdinand Marcos Jr. said the public deserves clarity on long-standing allegations involving infrastructure funds. “It’ s not right that it’ s only junior officials, contractors, and others who are being pointed to as merely following orders. Who gave the orders? That is what we really need to get to,” the senator said. Marcos also defended Senate discussions on the possible remote participation of senators in impeachment proceedings, saying the chamber has the constitutional authority to set its own rules for impeachment trials. She clarified that no final decision had been reached when tensions escalated inside the Senate. “They haven’t even discussed the details yet — what remote participation means, what the voting process will be, what the participation setup is. None of that has been defined yet,” Marcos said. She said procedural discussions should not be misinterpreted as attempts to derail the impeachment process, rejecting claims that Senate actions on impeachment were being used as a diversion from other national issues. “It is not a diversionary tactic. We were all focused on it,” she said, insisting that senators had been actively preparing for the proceedings. She said the Senate had been waiting for the formal transmission of the Articles of Impeachment before fully moving forward. “We were discussing what to do about the impeachment to make it transparent, clear, fast, and orderly,” Marcos said. “We were really looking forward to tackling it,” she said. She argued that the Senate’s reputation was being damaged not by dissenting senators but by alleged cover-ups, political maneuvering, and the continued politicization of national issues.

- DOT welcomes new direct flights from China (2026-05-27 16:03)

THE Department of Tourism (DOT) has welcomed the launch of three new direct flights from China to Manila as part of efforts to strengthen air connectivity and sustain the recovery of the country’s tourism sector. The new routes include Hangzhou–Manila, Changsha–Manila, and Chongqing–Manila, expanding access between the Philippines and key cities in China. XiamenAir launched its inaugural Hangzhou–Manila service on May 20, while Qingdao Airlines began operating the Changsha–Manila route on May 16, followed by XiamenAir’s Chongqing–Manila service on May 21. The DOT said the additional routes are expected to increase visitor arrivals, tourism exchanges, and business opportunities between the two countries. Tourism Secretary Bernardita Angara-Mathay said the continued expansion of direct connectivity reflects the government’s broader strategy to accelerate recovery in the Chinese market. “Under the directive of President Ferdinand R. Marcos Jr., we are accelerating the restoration of air connectivity from China because we recognize that this market remains one of the Philippines’ biggest opportunities for tourism growth,” Angara-Mathay said. “At the same time, recovery remains well below pre-pandemic levels, and this shows that the challenge is no longer demand alone but our ability to convert that returning interest into actual travel through sufficient, reliable, and commercially sustainable access,” she added. From Jan. 1 to May 19, the Philippines recorded 7.78 million international air seats for direct inbound flights, an increase of 8.31 percent compared with the same period in 2025. The DOT noted that the Chongqing service marks the 33rd direct international route launched in the Philippines since the start of 2025, underscoring continued growth in international connectivity. The agency said the new flights are expected to spur Philippine tourism while strengthening economic and cultural ties between the two countries.

- Parola fire victims decry cramped quarters (2026-05-27 16:02)

RESIDENTS displaced by the fire in Parola Compound decried the poor living conditions in the evacuation center, citing unsanitary restroom facilities and cramped spaces. Rosalina Malabarbas, a 56-year-old baker, told The Manila Times that living conditions in the Delpan Evacuation Center have become difficult, particularly due to poorly maintained restrooms. “We are OK, but we can’t go to the CR,” she said in Filipino. She added that they are left to clean the bathroom all on their own, despite having barely salvaged any belongings from the fire. She also said families have been forced to stay in cramped quarters, with around 5 to 6 families sharing a single room in the evacuation center. The fire on Saturday — which escalated to Task Force Charlie — displaced 2,134 families. About 500 families are staying at the Delpan Evacuation Center. The center provides food, medical aid, and psychosocial support for the victims. Liezel Ausa, a 50-year-old vendor in Divisoria, echoed Malabarbas’ sentiments. She added that since their evacuation, she has been struggling to make ends meet, attending to her family’s needs at the evacuation center. “My sister washes clothes for a living, and it’s only the two of us who earn for the family, so we are having a hard time earning a living now,” Ausa said in Filipino. Ausa revealed that this is not the first time she has been evacuated from Parola compound, noting that fires frequently happen in the area. On March 6, Ausa’s home was ravaged by a fire. Her family received a total of P25,000 in cash assistance from the government and was told that they would receive more. However, two months after the fire, they have yet to receive the additional aid they were promised. Since the May 23 Parola compound fire, each affected family has received a total of P35,000 in assistance from the government and private institutions. On May 25, President Ferdinand Marcos Jr. led the distribution of cash assistance, hygiene kits, food and construction materials to the families in the evacuation center. A total of P30,000 in rebuilding and recovery assistance will be provided by the National Housing Authority, with an additional P10,000 in immediate cash relief from the Department of Social Welfare and Development. During the distribution, Marcos assured the families that the government “will not stop providing food and all kinds of assistance” to the families affected. “We’re still waiting for it to come — I hope it will,” she said. Meanwhile, Malabarbas hopes that the government will provide them permanent housing, noting that existing aid is insufficient. “We just need a house. We can settle for government housing plans where we will pay through monthly installments — as long as we have a new place to live,” she said.

- ‘Probe NAIA privatization deal breach’ (2026-05-27 16:01)

TWO major labor organizations called on Congress to investigate an alleged breach in a privatization agreement covering the operations of the Ninoy Aquino International Airport (NAIA), warning that gaps in independent oversight could weaken public accountability and heighten national security risks. The Bukluran ng Manggagawang Pilipino (BMP) and the National Confederation of Labor (NCL) said in a joint statement on Tuesday that the government has failed to activate a mandatory independent consultant required under the concession agreement for the modernization of NAIA. In 2024, the Department of Transportation (DOTr) and the Manila International Airport Authority entered into a multibillion-peso public-private partnership with New NAIA Infrastructure Corp., a consortium led by San Miguel Corp., to modernize the country's main international gateway. The consortium, New NAIA Infrastructure Corp. (NNIC), is tasked with upgrading airport facilities, improving operations, and expanding capacity under the long-term concession deal. "The Filipino people were promised modernization. What they are now seeing is the slow surrender of public accountability, labor protection, and national sovereignty," BMP and NCL said. The groups said the independent consultant mechanism — intended to provide third-party monitoring of the concession — was allegedly not activated, reportedly due to cost concerns. Without it, they warned, there is no neutral body ensuring compliance with safeguards designed to protect the public interest. "This is not a simple technical violation. This is a dangerous collapse of independent oversight in one of the country's most critical national infrastructures," the groups said. "A privatization contract without independent oversight is nothing more than a blank check handed to corporate interests." They also raised concerns over possible implications on border security, anti-smuggling operations, emergency response coordination, and aviation safety, citing the airport's role in handling more than 50 million passengers annually. "Ninoy Aquino International Airport is not an ordinary business venture. It is the country's primary international gateway, directly tied to national security, anti-smuggling operations, anti-trafficking enforcement, emergency response, and border protection. Have we subcontracted national security?" the groups said. The labor groups warned further that while the concessionaire is guaranteed profitability under the agreement, workers and small enterprises are absorbing the economic impact through job displacement and rising operational costs. Romeo Sauler, president of the PUSO ng NAIA industry group, said in a separate statement that airport modernization costs are being passed on to the public through higher fees and travel expenses amid inflationary pressures and a weak peso. "The privatization of NAIA was sold to Filipinos as the 'golden ticket' to modernization. But months into the deal, the public is now asking: modernization for whom? Certainly not for ordinary traveler, worker, OFW, or small entrepreneur," Sauler said. He added that the increased rental rates inside airport terminals have forced several small businesses to scale down or shut down operations, resulting in immediate job losses. A broader coalition of consumer groups, commuter advocates, labor federations, migrant workers' rights organizations, and policy experts has since convened to explore possible legal and political actions regarding the concession agreement. Among the participating groups are Gabriela Women's Party, Kabataan Party-list, ACT Teachers Party-list, SUKI Network, Para sa Commuters Network, Sandigan PH, Concerned Seafarers of the Philippines, Kilusang Mayo Uno, and Bayan.

- Truth Commission to shed light on drug war deaths (2026-05-27 16:00)

A GROUP led by a Catholic bishop launched a fact-finding body on Wednesday to document accounts of witnesses and other details of ex-president Rodrigo Duterte's bloody antidrugs crackdown that the government can use to prosecute law enforcers. Duterte, who ended his stormy six-year presidency in 2022, was arrested last year and taken to the Netherlands, where he is facing trial before the International Criminal Court (ICC) in The Hague for alleged crimes against humanity over the killings. Sen. Ronald Dela Rosa, Duterte's loyal ally and his former national police chief, who first enforced the bloody crackdown, is wanted by the ICC as a co-perpetrator for some of the thousands of killings, which alarmed Western governments and human rights groups. Dela Rosa has gone into hiding and is being hunted by the authorities, who have vowed to enforce an ICC warrant for his arrest and turn him over to the global court. Dela Rosa and the brash-speaking Duterte have denied authorizing extrajudicial killings, but the then-president had repeatedly threatened suspects with death. Many of the thousands of police officers directly involved in the brutal crackdown that left thousands of mostly poor suspects dead have not been thoroughly investigated, and very few have been convicted, according to human rights groups. "This is long overdue," Cardinal Pablo Virgilio David said in a news conference. The nongovernment "EJK Truth Commission" he helped organize will focus on helping victims, their families and even repentant law enforcers to finally find closure, David said. "This is an opportunity for a catharsis... so we can recover our dignity as a country," David said. "Ultimately, what we aspire for is healing not only for the victims but also our institutions." Raul Pangalangan, a lawyer who has served for years as an ICC judge, said the commission he will head "was created to ensure that the stories of victims, survivors and families are heard, verified and preserved." Conspiracy of silence The commission plans to hold public hearings. "These things happened because everybody looked the other way," Pangalangan said. "It is almost a conspiracy of silence." Members of the commission said they will allow the government to use their findings to help authorities investigate, prosecute and seek accountability. Their periodic reports may be submitted to justice and human rights officials, they said. David called on civil society, academic, religious and other groups to help the commission and said a large charity group in Germany has offered funding support. Commission member Raquel Fortun, a forensic pathologist with the state-run University of the Philippines, said the task of establishing facts years after the killings would be difficult. There were efforts by some law enforcers involved in the killings to evade accountability. Death certificates of 13 drug suspects, whose remains were exhumed after Duterte stepped down from office, stated they died of natural causes, like heart attack and pneumonia, she said. "When I examined the remains, I found that they were hit by gunfire," Fortun said. ICC orders medical exam Meanwhile, judges at the ICC on Wednesday ordered a fresh medical assessment of Duterte and said his age and health condition could significantly affect the structure, pacing and scheduling of his upcoming crimes against humanity trial. During the first status conference before ICC Trial Chamber III in The Hague, Presiding Judge Joanna Korner said the chamber was inclined to reappoint the same panel of three medical experts who previously examined Duterte during confirmation proceedings, citing efficiency and their familiarity with his medical background. The court said the order for a renewed assessment would likely be issued later Wednesday or the following day. Judges emphasized that a separate determination of Duterte's fitness to stand trial was required at this stage, even though the issue had already been examined earlier in the proceedings. The defense proposed reengaging the same experts, arguing this would avoid duplication of work and ensure continuity in evaluating Duterte's condition. Korner agreed the approach was practical, noting that the experts had already reviewed Duterte's medical history and conducted prior examinations. The prosecution did not oppose the reappointment but objected to parts of the defense's proposed instructions, saying the chamber itself should define the scope and legal framework of the evaluation under ICC standards. The ICC Registry also supported reappointing the same experts, saying they were immediately available and already familiar with the case background. The judges emphasized that the medical findings would directly shape how the trial proceeds, including the length and frequency of hearings. "It seems to me that because of his age, potentially medical problems, there will have to be a day off," Korner said, referring to possible midweek breaks or shortened hearing schedules. She said setting a trial schedule would be difficult until they had an up-to-date medical report. The discussion on Duterte's health emerged as a central factor in wider debates over the trial timetable. The prosecution proposed a Nov. 30 start date for the trial, saying additional time was needed to complete disclosure and other preparatory requirements. Prosecutors said they had identified 11 key tasks that must be completed before trial and considered a Sept. 30 target for readiness feasible but demanding. "It will not be easy. It will require us to work hard and efficiently," the prosecution told the chamber. Victims' representatives urged an earlier start date of Sept. 30, arguing that proceedings should move forward without unnecessary delay. "At the moment, Nov. 30 seems to them a reasonable period of time. January is too long," victims' counsel Paolina Massidda said, adding that parts of the case involving English-speaking witnesses could proceed earlier while interpretation issues were resolved. Defense counsel Peter Haynes declined to commit to a fixed timetable, citing unresolved preliminary issues, including Duterte's fitness to stand trial.

- Visayas officials lead governance poll (2026-05-27 16:00)

A GOVERNANCE survey placed several officials in Central Visayas at the top of its performance rankings, reflecting strong public confidence amid rising expectations for accountability, service delivery and government modernization. The Index of Governance (IOG) survey conducted by the RPMD Foundation Inc. rated district representatives based on legislative performance, constituent service, accessibility, responsiveness and overall public service delivery. City mayors, on the other hand, were assessed on leadership, fiscal management, anti-corruption initiatives, digital governance, infrastructure development, disaster response, peace and order, environmental programs and social services. RPMD said the IOG combines trust ratings and performance indicators to measure leadership effectiveness and citizen confidence. According to RPMD Executive Director Paul Martinez, the survey does not measure popularity alone but focuses on governance delivery, responsiveness, accessibility and public trust. The survey was conducted from April 1 to 8, involving 5,000 respondents from various socioeconomic classes interviewed face-to-face. It carries a ± 1 percent margin of error at a 95-percent confidence level. District representatives In the "Tier 1" category, leading congressional performers were Rep. Emmarie "Lolypop" Ouano-Dizon of Mandaue City — 87.8 percent; Rep. Junard "Ahong" Chan of Lapu-Lapu City — 87.3 percent; Rep. Karen Garcia of Cebu's third district — 85.2 percent; and Rep. Daphne Lagon of Cebu's sixth district — 83.5 percent. RPMD said the results were driven by strong public trust, visibility and consistent response to local concerns. In the second tier, rankings included Rep. Rhea Gullas (86.9 percent), Rep. Edu Rama (86.4 percent) and Rep. Duke Frasco (84.8 percent), reflecting strong constituent engagement. Completing the Central Visayas list were Rep. Edsel Galeos (82.7 percent), Rep. Patsy Calderon (82.2 percent) and Rep. Sun Shimura (80.7 percent). In Bohol, Rep. Alexie Tutor led with 80 percent, followed by Rep. Vanvan Aumentado (77 percent), Rep. Baba Yap (75.2 percent) and Rep. Cutie del Mar (70.9 percent). RPMD cited strong emphasis on accessibility and grassroots service. City mayors In the mayoral rankings, three officials were statistically tied under Tier 1: Mayor Thadeo Jovito “Jonkie” Ouano of Mandaue City — 85.2 percent; Mayor Samsam Gullas of Talisay City — 84.7 percent; and Mayor Cindi Chan of Lapu-Lapu City — 83.5 percent. Their ratings were driven by leadership performance, fiscal discipline, anti-corruption initiatives, digitalization efforts, infrastructure programs, disaster response and service delivery. Other rankings included: Mayor Nestor Archival of Cebu City — 81.9 percent; Mayor Joie Perales of Toledo City — 81.1 percent; Mayor Val Chiong of Naga City — 79.1 percent; Mayor Jane Yap of Tagbilaran City — 77.7 percent; Mayor Mayel Martinez of Bogu City — 75.2 percent; Mayor Nito Durano of Danao City — 71.8 percent; and Mayor Patrick Barcenas of Carcar City — 70.7 percent. RPMD said the results reflect growing public demand for governance anchored on performance, accountability, modernization and visible public service delivery.

- Nursing students to get P25K cash aid (2026-05-27 16:00)

SEN. Bam Aquino said that 19,000 nursing and allied health sciences students stand to receive a one-time P25,000 financial aid for their related learning experience (RLE) expenses. The senator said the grant of the financial assistance was the fulfillment of his campaign promise with the help of the Commission on Higher Education (CHED). In his meetings with nursing students during the 2025 senatorial campaign, Aquino promised to address their concerns over the high cost of RLE, which is similar to on-the-job training and is required for graduation. During his stint as chairman of the Committee on Basic Education, Aquino said he secured P500 million in the 2026 national budget to help cover the RLE expenses of allied health sciences students. Aquino on Monday attended the CHED's launch of the online portal for the submission of applications and supporting documents for the Allied Health Experiential Assistance for Deserving Students grant. Aquino said the grant, established in 2026 through CHED Memorandum Order 11, will help "ease the financial burden on students and their families, especially amid rising prices of goods and petroleum products."

- China issues new rules to keep senior military officials in check (2026-05-27 15:47)

BEIJING — China has issued new measures to enforce discipline for top military officials, state media reported Wednesday, the latest push in President Xi Jinping's years-long effort to purge corruption from the armed forces. Xi's sweeping anti-graft campaign has gutted the top ranks, bringing down two defence ministers in the past three years and reducing the once seven-member Central Military Commission (CMC) -- China's top military body -- to just Xi and one other general. The rot at the top and scale of the purge of military officials has left analysts questioning the ability of China's armed forces to fight effectively. On Wednesday, CCTV reported that the CMC -- which Xi heads -- had published new measures that would "establish iron rules for strict education, strict management, and strict supervision" of senior military cadres. The measures, which contain 26 articles across seven areas, would "reinforce the supervision and management of key leaders" during their duties and "across all aspects of work and life", CCTV said. The exact regulations were not published, but they would establish "explicit rules" on the Communist Party's management of military cadres and personnel selection, as well as political education and "ideological rectification", according to CCTV. The rules "focus on strictly enforcing discipline to alert minds and guide actions, tightly regulating principal officers so they lead by example". They would "promote the revolutionary forging of the senior officer cadres" and "advance modernisation of national defence", the state broadcaster added. China has significantly upgraded its military in recent years, but the armed forces have consistently battled corruption. On May 7, Wei Fenghe and Li Shangfu, who both served as defence minister between 2018 and 2023, were handed suspended death sentences for taking and offering bribes. In January, China's defence ministry said it was investigating the country's most powerful general, Zhang Youxia, who also sat on the CMC. China has the second-largest defence budget in the world, though still well behind the United States.

- Further suspect held over Berlin Holocaust memorial attack (2026-05-27 14:28)

BERLIN — German police on Wednesday arrested a man suspected of encouraging a jihadist-inspired knife attack on a Spanish tourist at Berlin's Holocaust memorial last year. A 20-year-old Syrian man named only as Wassim Al M. was jailed in March for 13 years for the attack in which he stabbed and seriously injured the tourist. The February 2025 assault inflamed an already heated debate on immigration just a few days before a general election in Germany. On Wednesday, prosecutors said another Syrian national, named as Khalaf A., had been arrested on suspicion of "aiding and abetting attempted murder and serious bodily harm". Khalaf A. is alleged to have spent the afternoon preceding the stabbing with Wassim Al M. and to have encouraged him to commit the attack. The judge who presided over Wassim Al M.'s conviction in March said that he committed the crime "in the name of the Islamic State group" and had been looking to target "Israelis or people of the Jewish faith". The attacker approached the victim from behind among the concrete steles of the memorial and inflicted a 14-centimetre (more than five-inch) cut to his throat, the judge said. The victim only survived because the knife missed major blood vessels by a few millimetres. Wassim Al M. confessed to the crime and told the court through his lawyer that he felt "shame" for his actions.

- Bangladesh probes hospital deaths of six newborns (2026-05-27 13:49)

DHAKA — At least six newborn babies died in the same hospital ward in Bangladesh within hours of each other on Wednesday, said health officials, who launched an investigation. The newborns, aged between one and three days, were in the post-delivery ward of Ad-Din Hospital, a private facility in the capital Dhaka. "An investigation is underway, and we need some time to determine the cause of the deaths of the newborns," Nahida Yasmin, a director at the hospital, told reporters. Prabhat Chandra Biswas, head of the government's health department, noted that air conditioning in the ward was not working in the early hours on Wednesday, as temperatures in Dhaka were around 32C. "There is no alternative ventilation once the air conditioner is turned off," he told reporters, saying the atmosphere inside was suffocating. One baby fell sick and was taken to an intensive care unit, but was returned to the ward an hour later. Around dawn, five other babies were feeling unwell. "All were put on ventilators but could not be saved," Yasmin said. Health department spokesman Zahid Raihan said initial information did not suggest any mistreatment as the cause of the deaths. "The Criminal Investigation Department is... testing whether there were any technical faults in the air conditioner or any electrical equipment," he said. Janu, a 55-year-old woman whose granddaughter was among the six dead, sat at the entrance of the hospital holding a tiny body wrapped in a shroud. "My granddaughter was perfectly okay until last night," she told AFP. The babies "turned blue one after another... We took her to the ICU and later received her body," Janu said. Others families at the hospital appeared nervous, with some saying they were considering transferring their children elsewhere. "My grandson has been in the ICU for 19 days in a critical condition -- I can't understand what I should do," Mohammed Harun told AFP.

- Thai cop says viral image of policemen in dresses is fake (2026-05-27 13:40)

BANGKOK — A viral image of Thai policemen wearing colourful, sparkly dresses for a drug-smuggling raid was generated with AI, the police officer responsible said. The picture of six officers shown in the dancer costumes while flanking a suspect became a viral sensation from Southeast Asia to the Americas. Major media outlets reported it as a genuine police sting operation in Thailand -- but the officer who originally posted it told AFP the picture was AI-generated. AFP's fact check department sourced the image to the Facebook page of Tha Luang Provincial Police Station in Lopburi province after finding a "very high" likelihood that it was made using AI. Police sergeant Rachata Mitruripong, the Facebook page's administrator, said he was responsible for it. "I wanted to create a friendlier image of the police -- showing a cute and humorous side -- so that people would feel more comfortable approaching officers," he told AFP on Tuesday. "Sometimes the public feels intimidated by the police," he said. Rachata said the arrest details in the post were genuine, and provided AFP with the original image, which had only five male officers in ordinary clothes around the suspect. Another officer at the police station confirmed to AFP that Rachata manages its Facebook page, but added he was unaware the AI-generated image had spread internationally. The image went viral after it was reposted by a local media outlet. It is not the first time police purportedly carrying out sting operations in extravagant outfits have taken the internet by storm. During Lunar New Year celebrations in February, Thai police donned a red-and-gold lion costume to arrest a burglar.

suspect. A Peruvian police officer last year dressed as a capybara and pretended to take Valentine's Day gifts to a drug dealer before rushing into his house and arresting him.

- ICC open to start Duterte trial on Nov. 30 amid procedural rulings (2026-05-27 12:52)

MANILA, Philippines — The International Criminal Court (ICC) Trial Chamber III signaled it was willing to accept the prosecution's proposed Nov. 30, 2026 start date for the trial of former president Rodrigo Duterte, as judges issued a wide range of procedural rulings on victim participation, filing limits, and case management ahead of trial preparations. The indication came during the first status conference where Presiding Judge Joanna Korner also laid down directions on how the case would proceed through its pre-trial and trial phases, including timelines for submissions and expert assessments. On scheduling, the chamber said it was prepared to accede to the prosecution's request for a Nov. 30 start, marking a key step toward setting the framework for trial proceedings, which remain dependent on ongoing disclosure and preparatory work. The Office of the Prosecutor had argued that additional time was necessary to complete pre-trial requirements, while victims' representatives had pushed for an earlier commencement date. Alongside the scheduling discussion, the chamber adopted several procedural measures intended to streamline the case and regulate participation. Judges approved the use of both individual and household victim application forms, allowing victims to choose either option depending on their circumstances. The court also authorized victims who participated in pre-trial proceedings to continue their participation into the trial phase. The Victim Participation and Reparations Section (VPRS) was directed to submit a mapping report, with a deadline set 30 days after the Article 74 judgment, as part of efforts to organize victim-related documentation. To manage workload and efficiency, the chamber imposed a 12-page limit on written submissions from all parties, participants, and the Registry. Any request to exceed the limit must be justified and approved in advance. The court also announced that additional status conferences would be held, with judges encouraging parties to reserve less urgent issues for oral discussion rather than lengthy written filings. On procedural protocols, the Registry was instructed to file updated guidelines covering witness preparation, familiarization procedures, and evidence submission practices. These include references to existing ICC chamber manuals and prior jurisprudence, including the Al-Rahman case framework. The Registry was also tasked with submitting updates on vulnerability classifications, redaction procedures, and e-court system protocols by June 15, particularly in relation to how evidence will be handled during trial. The chamber reiterated that it would generally rely on established ICC protocols already in place, while allowing flexibility for case-specific adjustments. Victim participation rules were further clarified, with the court setting the end of the prosecution's presentation of evidence as the cutoff point for new victim applications under an "ABC participation approach." The judges also addressed the accused's fitness to stand trial, directing the prosecution and defense to jointly draft instructions for medical experts by June 3. The Registry was ordered to immediately contact the three experts who previously assessed Duterte to confirm their availability for a renewed evaluation. The court indicated a preference for reusing the same panel of experts, citing continuity and efficiency. The scheduling decision, however, remains provisional and tied to broader procedural developments, including disclosure progress, interpretation logistics, and the outcome of updated medical assessments that could affect the pace of hearings. Further status conferences are expected as the ICC continues to finalize preparations for what would be the next stage in the Duterte case proceedings.

- Drilon blasts Senate majority over rule change tied to impeachment trial of VP Sara Duterte (2026-05-27 12:46)

MANILA, Philippines -- Former Senate president Franklin Drilon believes that the "rude" attempt of the majority bloc to railroad changes in the Senate rules was tied to the impeachment trial of Vice President Sara Duterte. The former senator warned against the "tyranny of the majority" after the Senate majority bloc tried to ram through amendments allowing senators to vote remotely. Drilon said that Sen. Erwin Tulfo was correct in calling "a spade a spade" when he pointed out that the amendment was meant to accommodate senators who may soon face detention over alleged plunder cases. "This is ugly. I have never seen this kind of bastusan (rudeness) in the history of the Senate," Drilon said in a statement on Wednesday. "This is malicious and grave abuse of discretion I have never seen in the history of the Senate. It must be condemned," he said. Drilon said the move was directly connected to the impending impeachment trial of Duterte and threatens the credibility and independence of the Senate. "It is now connected to the impeachment trial," Drilon said. According to him, the amendment could affect crucial rulings during the impeachment proceedings if senators facing detention or hiding from arrest are still allowed to vote remotely.

- ‘Jangmi’ to enter PAR Thursday as severe tropical storm (2026-05-27 12:15)

MANILA, Philippines – Tropical Storm "Jangmi" has been forecast to enter the Philippine Area of Responsibility (PAR) Thursday night as a severe tropical storm, according to the state weather bureau. Nathaniel Servando, Philippine Atmospheric Geophysical and Astronomical Services Administration (Pagasa) chief, said that the weather disturbance has also the possibility of developing further into a typhoon by Saturday. He told The Manila Times that its trough or extension has been affecting Davao Oriental and Davao Occidental where cloudy skies with scattered rains and thunderstorms would prevail. "This weather disturbance is less likely to make landfall over the country. However, its periphery may still bring gusty conditions over extreme Northern Luzon," Servando said. The highest wind signal that may be raised during the passage of this tropical cyclone would be Signal No. 1, according to the national weather agency. It may also enhance the southwest monsoon locally known as "habagat" starting on Saturday, according to the Pagasa administrator.

- Marcos optimistic about making pitch on PH as investment hub for Japanese businesses (2026-05-27 11:58)

MANILA, Philippines — Malacanang on Wednesday expressed optimism President Ferdinand Marcos Jr.’s state visit to Japan would yield positive results particularly in business and trade. “The president is optimistic about the outcome of his visit to Japan. Many stakeholders and investors have shown interest in investing in our country,” Palace Press Officer Claire Castro said in Filipino in a statement. She was reacting to a piece published on Nikkei Asia, saying the chief executive “is likely to have a more difficult time pitching Philippine investment opportunities to Japanese investors and business leaders.” The concerns were due to “persistent tax disputes, corruption, weak infrastructure and political bickering.” Castro insisted that the government under Marcos’ watch remained unceasing in making sweeping reforms to boost investor confidence and pour in more capital to the local market. “We see the work of the president, the administration’s fight against corruption in the country and launching of better processes for investors — positive actions to gain investors’ trust,” she said. The president is currently in Tokyo for a state visit. Part of his agenda are meetings with Japanese business leaders. He, along with Prime Minister Sanae Takaichi, is also expected to witness the signing of “an important agreement in trade and investment”, details of which would be released by Malacañang and the Department of Trade and Industry (DTI) soon.

- ICC to rely on overall time estimates for witnesses, pushes for tighter sequencing of testimony (2026-05-27 11:27)

MANILA, Philippines — Proceedings in the case against former president Rodrigo Duterte focused on witness management and trial efficiency, with the Trial Chamber III presiding judge indicating that the court would adopt a flexible approach to time allocation while stressing the importance of structured presentation of evidence. Judge Joanna Korner said during Wednesday's case status conference that specific time limits for individual witnesses would be addressed at a later stage, but emphasized that the chamber would generally work on the basis of overall estimates rather than imposing strict time controls per witness. The prosecution has indicated it expected to call around 60 to 70 witnesses, including approximately 30 insider witnesses, based on its submissions to the court. The defense did not dispute the figures during the hearing, saying it would rely on earlier filings on the matter. A central issue raised by the bench was how witness testimony would be sequenced during the trial. Korner pointed to difficulties encountered in a previous trial, where witnesses linked to the same incident were called months apart, a practice she said risked producing inconsistencies that might otherwise have been identified earlier in the proceedings. To avoid similar issues, she urged the prosecution to present witnesses relating to the same incidents consecutively, noting that gaps in sequencing could affect the coherence and reliability of the evidence as a whole. She said the court would prefer a more continuous presentation of incident-specific testimony, allowing related accounts to be examined in close succession rather than being spread out over extended periods. The prosecution acknowledged the concern, saying it would take the guidance into account in organizing its witness schedule, while also noting that the structure of the case involved multiple discrete incidents with relatively fewer witnesses per event.

MANILA, Philippines — A group led by a Roman Catholic bishop in the Philippines launched a fact-finding body Wednesday to document accounts of witnesses and other details of ex-President Rodrigo Duterte's bloody anti-drugs crackdown that the government can use to prosecute law enforcers. Commission member Raquel Fortun, a forensic pathologist with the state-run University of the Philippines, told The Associated Press that the task of establishing facts years after the killings would be difficult. There were efforts by some law enforcers involved in the killings to evade accountability. Death certificates of 13 drug suspects, whose remains were exhumed after Duterte stepped down from office, stated they died of natural causes, like heart attack and pneumonia, she said. "When I examined the remains, I found that they were hit by gunfire," Fortun said.

- Philippines brings aid to Sinlaku-hit Filipino workers in Mariana Islands (2026-05-27 09:24)

SAIPAN, Northern Marianas — The Philippine government has started distributing emergency financial assistance to overseas Filipino workers in the Commonwealth of the Northern Marianas Islands following the devastation caused by Super Typhoon Sinlaku, one of the strongest storms to hit the US territory in recent years. Super Typhoon Sinlaku caused six confirmed casualties in the CNMI and inflicted catastrophic damage that was still being financially calculated, though nearby regional benchmarks and utility aid indicate losses well into the hundreds of millions of dollars. Entire communities across Saipan and Tinian suffered from flooding, roof damage, prolonged power outages, and destruction of homes and personal property, leaving many residents struggling to recover weeks after the storm. Labor attaché Saul De Vries said the Department of Migrant Workers and the Overseas Workers Welfare Administration began distributing aid on May 26 and would continue through May 30 while resources remain available. “We came here to address the needs of our kababayans, of our compatriots here in CNMI,” De Vries said. “We understand that these are the islands that were really devastated by Super Typhoon Sinlaku.” The DMW and OWWA are providing $100 each to eligible overseas Filipino workers affected by the typhoon. Permanent residents and green card holders are excluded because they fall outside the agencies’ jurisdiction. Distribution started at the Beach Garden Hotel in Garapan after flight delays disrupted the original schedule. Separate teams are also expected to travel to Tinian for additional payouts. De Vries assured workers that the Philippine government would continue helping as long as funding remains available. “I would like to assure everybody that for as long as we have the resources to distribute, we will distribute them,” he said. Many Filipino workers described severe losses brought by the typhoon. Kris Romero, 40, originally from Cavite and now working at Pacific Quick Print & Post, said floodwaters damaged her apartment and destroyed appliances and electronics, including her air-conditioning unit. Romero has lived on Saipan for 19 years. “This is my first time I got something,” Romero said. “I’m very happy.” Arnel Carillo, 47, a worker at Hydro Mechanical System originally from Laguna, said his house was flooded during the storm. He has been in Saipan for more than two years. Helen Olbes, 62, an employee of Island Business Systems and Supplies who has spent 25 years in Saipan, said strong winds ripped part of her roof off, allowing rainwater to damage belongings inside her home. Olbes is originally from Manila. “I just want to thank our government for this initiative to provide financial assistance to us overseas Filipino workers,” Olbes said. “This is a big help, especially now that almost all of us are struggling after this super typhoon.” Wilma Dellota, 65, who works at Herman’s Modern Bakery and has lived on Saipan for 37 years, said flooding inside her barracks destroyed nearly all her belongings. Dellota is originally from Cabuyao, Laguna. Marife Perez, 35, a daycare worker at Golden Harvest International School from Batangas, said the typhoon damaged the roof of her home and ruined several personal items. Perez has been on Saipan for a year and a half. “We’re very thankful and blessed that our government blessed us with this kind of financial assistance,” Perez said. “It will be very helpful for us because the typhoon Sinlaku hit us very hard here on Saipan.” Gloria Sabado, 57, an accountant originally from Batac, Ilocos Norte, said her home suffered flooding and structural damage during the storm. She has lived on Saipan for 40 years. Eydie Uy, 68, who works at Makeover Salon and has spent four decades on Saipan, said his apartment survived but his vehicle was heavily flooded and unusable for several days. Uy is originally from Tacloban. “In a way, it’s a big help for us, especially us that we are the victims of Super Typhoon Sinlaku,” Uy said. Eduardo B. Palomique, 62, a truck driver at MingYang Supermarket who has lived on Saipan since 1991, said his family’s house lost much of its roof and was flooded during the storm. Originally from Laguna, Palomique said the OWWA payout was the first aid his family had received since the typhoon. “At least we got something. This is big help for us,” Palomique said.

- ICC hears proposed dates for Duterte trial as status conference opens (2026-05-27 09:13)

MANILA, Philippines — The International Criminal Court (ICC) on Wednesday heard competing proposals on when the trial of former president Rodrigo Duterte should begin, with suggested dates ranging from September 2026 to January next year, as parties raised concerns over disclosure timelines, defense preparedness, and interpretation capacity at the opening of the status conference of Duterte's trial at The Hague, Netherlands on Wednesday. Judge Joanna Korner, head of the Pre-Trial Chamber, III considered submissions from the prosecution, defense, victims' representatives, and the court registry on the proposed commencement of trial in the case against Duterte. The Office of the Prosecutor proposed a Nov. 30, 2026 start date, saying it required additional time to complete disclosure and other preparatory tasks before trial could proceed. Prosecutors said they had reviewed 11 key tasks necessary before commencement and concluded that a September 30 completion target for preparatory work was feasible, though demanding. The prosecution said the proposed timetable was not arbitrary but based on an assessment of the earliest workable schedule consistent with efficiency and proper case preparation. “It will not be easy. It will require us to work hard and efficiently,” the prosecution said, adding that more time would reduce the risk of errors and improve coordination among counsel, particularly given recent changes in the defense team. Legal representatives for victims, however, urged an earlier start on September 30, arguing that the proceedings should move forward without unnecessary delay. They said they had consulted their clients and were prepared to proceed within that timeframe. “At the moment, November 30 seems to them a reasonable period of time. January is too long,” victims' counsel Paolina Massidda said, while also indicating that the case could begin earlier with witnesses who are able to testify in English, with interpretation issues addressed in parallel. The defense declined to commit to a fixed start date, citing unresolved preliminary issues, including questions regarding the accused's fitness to stand trial. Defense counsel Peter Haynes stressed that there should be a sufficient gap between the end of disclosure and the start of proceedings, traditionally at least three months, to ensure adequate preparation. Haynes argued that if disclosure concluded by the end of September, a trial start closer to late December—or potentially January 2027—would better align with established practice and avoid compressing preparation time. Interpretation capacity emerged as another key issue. The ICC Registry said it was still working to recruit and train interpreters for languages expected to be used by witnesses, including Philippine languages such as Tagalog, alongside English. The Registry explained that while English-language testimony could allow proceedings to begin earlier, full witness hearings would require properly trained simultaneous interpreters. They also noted that opening stages of the trial could proceed before full interpretation capacity was completed, but stressed the need for adequate preparation time. Registry representatives added that outreach considerations were being taken into account, but emphasized that priority remained ensuring accurate interpretation for the accused and witnesses. Judge Korner acknowledged the differing positions, noting the need to balance efficiency with fairness and preparedness. She said the chamber would consider all submissions before issuing a determination on the proposed start date at the conclusion of the status conference. Korner opened the first status conference, asking both prosecution and defense to have a strong emphasis on procedural discipline, urging all parties to keep legal arguments focused, efficient, and strictly tied to the issues before the court. Korner said the status conference marked the beginning of the trial's structured case management phase and was intended to ensure that proceedings move forward in an orderly and efficient manner, in line with reforms aimed at improving the performance of the ICC. She cited recommendations from the Independent Expert Review published in 2020, which called for enhanced efficiency and effectiveness across the court's operations, noting that all organs of the ICC have since adopted measures to strengthen case management practices. Central to her remarks was a reminder that the success of a complex international trial depends on discipline from all participants—prosecution, defense, victims' representatives, registry officials, and judges. "Efficiency and effectiveness is dependent on actions taken by all parties to a trial—the prosecution, the defence, the victims' representatives, the registry, and the judges—cooperating procedurally," Korner said. She stressed that procedural cooperation must not be mistaken for any dilution of fairness or independence in the proceedings, nor for any reduction in the prosecution's burden of proof or the rights of the accused. Korner outlined the core objectives of a criminal trial, including ensuring the acquittal of the innocent and conviction of the guilty, safeguarding fair treatment of all parties, and upholding the rights of the accused under Article 67 of the Rome Statute, while also recognizing the interests of victims and witnesses. A key focus of her intervention was the need to curb unnecessary or prolonged legal exchanges, which she said can slow down proceedings in complex cases. Korner urged parties to ensure that legal arguments remain strictly relevant to the issues before the court, signaling that repetitive or overly extended submissions would not advance the efficiency of the trial. She also emphasized early identification of the real issues in dispute, greater reliance on agreed facts where possible, and a clear and concise presentation of evidence. "Presentation of evidence, whether disputed or not, must take place in the shortest and clearest way," she said, adding that this approach was particularly important in lengthy international proceedings. The judge further encouraged parties to resolve procedural matters between themselves before bringing disputes to the bench, particularly on issues such as disclosure. She said requests should first be discussed by the parties, with the prosecution expected to provide clear reasons when refusing disclosure. While setting these expectations, Korner noted that the chamber had received constructive engagement from all sides ahead of the status conference and expressed confidence in the professionalism of counsel involved. She added that while the court preferred cooperation over intervention, it would not hesitate to exercise its case management powers if necessary to ensure efficiency and fairness in the proceedings.

- PNP revokes dela Rosa's gun licenses (2026-05-27 08:32)

MANILA, Philippines — The Philippine National Police Firearms and Explosives Office (PNP-FEO) has revoked the licenses of firearms registered under Sen. Ronald dela Rosa. Dated May 26, the revocation order was signed by Brig. Gen. Jose Manalad Jr., FEO chief. “The license to own and possess firearms (LTOPF) and firearms registration of Sen. Ronald Marapon dela Rosa are hereby revoked pursuant to Section 4, second paragraph, sub-paragraph (g) of RA No. 10591,” the revocation order read. On Tuesday, the FEO said the Firearms License Revocation and Restoration Board (FLRRB) has found section 4(g) of Republic Act 10591, or the Comprehensive Firearms and Ammunition Regulation Act as the ground to be used in revoking Dela Rosa’s gun permits. Section 4 lays down the Standards and Requisites for Issuance of and Obtaining a License to Own and Possess Firearms. Item G which specifically covers applicants says one should not have been convicted or does not have a pending criminal case before any court of law for a crime that is punishable with a penalty of more than two years. Not a revocation ground? Dela Rosa however, a longtime law enforcer and a former police chief, is not an applicant, his camp said, hence arguing that section 4(g) is “not a revocation ground.” Israelito Torreon, dela Rosa’s legal counsel, counters that section 4(g) only tells “who can get license” whereas section 39, separately titled “Grounds for Revocation” tells “who can lose one.” “They are different sections with different headings for a reason,” Torreon said. “Section 39 has ten grounds. Pending criminal case before any court? Not one of them. The only criminal-law grounds are: CONVICTION under Section 39(b), and a COURT ORDER under Section 39(j). Senator Dela Rosa has been convicted of nothing. No Philippine court has issued any order against him,” Torreon said.

- Remulla to seek DOJ hold departure order vs Angeles building owner, contractor after collapse (2026-05-27 08:13)

MANILA, Philippines — Department of the Interior and Local Government (DILG) Secretary Jonvic Remulla said on Wednesday he would ask the Department of Justice (DOJ) to issue a hold departure order (HDO) against the owner and contractor of the collapsed building in Barangay Balibago, Angeles City, Pampanga. Remulla said Ernest Jackson Lim, and Joel Young, should surface and coordinate with authorities as investigation and rescue operations continued. The collapsed structure, a multi-storey condo-hotel project reportedly intended for mixed commercial use, was under construction near the Clark Freeport Zone in Angeles City, a key tourism and business area in Pampanga. The project had been issued a building permit in 2023, with construction starting in 2024, and was part of a growing cluster of hospitality developments in the area. Authorities said the structure had previously been issued a temporary work stoppage order by labor regulators over safety compliance concerns, which was later lifted after reported rectification. “No one is qualified yet to give a fault-finding report. We are after the facts,” Remulla said, stressing that responsibility cannot yet be assigned while structural assessments are ongoing. He said qualified engineers would be deployed to examine the debris and determine the cause of the collapse, while reports from the Bureau of Fire Protection (BFP), local government units, and the Philippines National Police (PNP) are being consolidated. Remulla also said the Criminal Investigation and Detection Group (CIDG) would summon the contractor and property owner, citing possible criminal negligence over reports that workers were allegedly allowed to stay or sleep inside the construction site.

MANILA, Philippines — The House of Representatives' prosecution team for the impeachment trial of Vice President Sara Duterte appealed to the Senate to reconsider the trial's July 6 timetable. The scheduled was a tentative one. "In our view, July 6 is kind of far off. The Constitution is very clear that the impeachment trial shall proceed forthwith," Alonto Adiong said in a statement on Wednesday. Meanwhile, Lanao del Sur 1st District Rep. Zia Alonto Adiong, one of the spokesmen for the House prosecution team appreciated the senators opposing the proposal to allow online participation in the Senate's plenary sessions. "We fully respect the Senate as an independent institution, but we strongly believe that impeachment proceedings require personal presence, personal accountability and full attention from every senator-judge," Lanao del Sur 1st District Rep. Zia Alonto Adiong, one of the House prosecution panel's spokesmen, said in a statement on Wednesday. "There is no...extraordinary situation today that will justify online participation, especially while the impeachment trial is nearing," Alonto Adiong said in Filipino and English. "We appreciate those who stood firm in defending the integrity and solemnity of the institution and the impeachment process. It is important that the public's trust for our institutions is maintained", he said.

- DPWH expands flood control operations nationwide (2026-05-27 06:01)

MANILA, Philippines — As the country enters the final week of May, President Ferdinand R. Marcos Jr. has ordered the Department of Public Works and Highways (DPWH) and other concerned agencies of the government to intensify flood mitigation measures ahead of the expected onset of the rainy season in July. Marcos specifically directed the DPWH to speed up clearing and dredging operations in creeks, rivers, esteros, and drainage canals nationwide. The President also ordered the continued widening of waterways under the government's Oplan Kontra Baha (OKB) program to improve water flow and minimize flooding in vulnerable communities. Public Works Secretary Vince Dizon said the DPWH remained on full alert and was continuously carrying out anti-flood operations, especially in low-lying and flood-prone areas. Dizon assured the public that clearing and dredging activities would continue without interruption as part of the administration's preparations for the rainy months. He said the government was determined to reduce the severe flooding that regularly affects many parts of the country during heavy rains and typhoons. Among the priority areas under Oplan Kontra Baha are Metro Manila, where clogged waterways and urban congestion worsen flooding during strong downpours. The DPWH is also focusing on the Ilocos Region and Cagayan Valley, areas frequently battered by heavy rains and overflowing rivers during the monsoon season. Flood-prone provinces in Central Luzon, including Tarlac, are likewise undergoing intensified clearing and desilting operations.

MANILA, Philippines — President Ferdinand Marcos Jr. and First Lady Liza Araneta-Marcos were welcomed by Emperor Naruhito and Empress Masako at the Imperial Palace in Tokyo on Wednesday, marking the start of the Philippine leader's state visit to Japan. Hosting a state visit is a rare honor extended by Japan to select foreign leaders, with Marcos being only the third world leader that the Emperor has received on a since his accession to the throne in 2019. This demonstrates the deep strategic partnership between the Philippines and Japan, more significantly this year as both countries mark the 70th anniversary of the normalization of diplomatic relations. During the state call, the president received the Grand Cordon of the Supreme Order of the Chrysanthemum, Japan's highest and most prestigious award. The First Lady, meanwhile, was bestowed the Grand Cordon of the Order of the Precious Crown. The Grand Cordon of the Supreme Order of the Chrysanthemum, established in 1876 by Emperor Meiji, is bestowed on foreign heads of state, royalty, and distinguished leaders for exceptional service and contributions to Japan. The Order of the Precious Crown, on the other hand, is traditionally awarded to female members of foreign royal families and high-ranking women dignitaries during state visits.

• Sotto: Minority bloc may ask Supreme Court intervention if majority succeeds in changing Senate rules (2026-05-27 05:09)

MANILA, Philippines -- Senate Minority Leader Vicente Sotto III said the minority bloc would seek the Supreme Court's intervention if the majority group succeeded in changing the Senate rules to allow electronic voting. The minority bloc walked out Tuesday night to express its disgust over the majority's move to rush the changing of rules without exhaustive deliberation on the matter. "If we are not able to stop it (changing of Senate rules to allow virtual voting)," said Sotto in a text message on Wednesday when asked whether the minority intended to raise the issue before the high court. "Rules should be followed not changed for personal reasons. Our rules said, 'a change of rules must undergo a day rule and the rules committee must report out.' Why was it that [Sen. Rodante] Marcoleta insists on what is wrong?" Sotto said in Filipino and English. Sotto pointed out that the rules committee was "never" constituted after the leadership change on May 11 wherein he was replaced by Sen. Alan Peter Cayetano as Senate president. "There is no [rules committee] chairman. [Senator Joel Villanueva] was [in] acting capacity only. Why will they insist to change the rules when it is obviously just to favor [Senator] Bato [Dela Rosa] and whoever will be charged. That is not our fault," Sotto added.

• ICC to hold Duterte status conference today: What to expect (2026-05-27 04:57)

MANILA, Philippines — The International Criminal Court (ICC) will hold its first status conference in the case against former president Rodrigo Roa Duterte today, Wednesday, with judges set to tackle a sweeping agenda ranging from the trial start date and evidence disclosure to witness protection and victims' participation. The hearing at The Hague, Netherlands, will run from 3:30 p.m to 10:00 p.m (Philippine time) in three sessions: 3:30–5:00 p.m, 5:30–7:00 p.m, and 8:30–10:00 p.m. Duterte, who faces crimes against humanity charges over his administration's drug war, will not appear in person. Trial Chamber III granted his request to waive attendance, provided his defense filed a signed written waiver by May 25. His new legal team – counsel Peter Haynes and associate counsel Kate Gibson – will represent him. Agenda at a glance The public conference, though subject to private sessions for witness protection, will cover: - Trial start date and pre-trial deadlines – Judges will discuss when the trial should begin and set key filing deadlines leading up to it. Anticipated evidence – The prosecution will update the court on the estimated volume of witnesses, documentary evidence, use of expert witnesses, and audio-visual testimony. The chamber will also consider applying Rule 68 of the ICC Rules, which allows previously recorded testimony under certain conditions. · Agreed facts (Rule 69) – Both sides may identify uncontested points to streamline proceedings. · Language and interpretation – Needs for parties, participants, and witnesses, a critical logistical issue given the involvement of Filipino evidence and witnesses. · Disclosure obligations – Discussions will cover the impact of ongoing prosecution investigations, timing and volume of outstanding evidence disclosure, and transcription/translation issues.· Witness protection – Protective measures, including delayed disclosure of witness identities, will be on the table – a sensitive matter in a case involving alleged state-linked violence.· Potential addition of incidents – Prosecutors may seek to expand the scope of charges.· Trial briefs and pending motions – Any unresolved motions requiring resolution before trial begins.· Victims’ participation – A deadline for submission of applications and a mapping report from the Victims Participation and Reparations Section (VPRS).· Protocols – Witness preparation, witness familiarisation, handling of dual-status individuals (victims who are also witnesses), vulnerability issues, and other pre-trial protocols. What comes next The conference is largely procedural, but decisions taken today – particularly on the trial schedule and disclosure deadlines – will shape the pace of the case. Other issues raised in written submissions may be taken up in future status conferences leading to trial. The chamber, presided by Judge Joanna Korner with Judges Keebong Paek and Nicolas Guillou, ordered the conference to be public but may hold private sessions to protect witness security.

- PNP-CIDG to file obstruction of justice raps vs Padilla, others, over dela Rosa Senate escape (2026-05-27 03:53)

MANILA, Philippines — The Criminal Investigation and Detection Group (CIDG) of the Philippine National Police (PNP) on Wednesday said it was filing a complaint for obstruction of justice against Sen. Robinhood Padilla and several others before the Department of Justice for allegedly aiding in the “escape” of Sen. Ronald dela Rosa during the Senate shooting incident on May 13. In a statement, the CIDG said it has “officially concluded that the transport of Senator Dela Rosa was not a mere hitch ride on Senator Padilla’s car, but a highly coordinated, pre-planned logistical maneuver specifically executed to avoid detection while escaping the Senate premises in the dawn of May 14, 2026.” Investigation further revealed that “there was another vehicle tailing the car of Senator Padilla, which served as a security escort and backup car during the maneuver.” According to the CIDG, the legal action is in line with its mandate to conduct investigation and enforce the law equitably and without exception. “When individuals actively interfere in the arrest or assist in the evasion of criminal offenders to avoid prosecution, it undermines the justice system and compromises public order,” the CIDG said. The CIDG emphasized that “any act of obstruction of justice will be met with criminal prosecution.”

Ferdinand Alexander Marcos said in a statement. “Also, by retaining experienced personnel for an additional year, the organization benefits from their specialized expertise and institutional knowledge. This continuity is vital for the leadership and stability of law enforcement operations,” Marcos said, adding that the measure “aligns the retirement framework of the PNP with that of the” Armed Forces of the Philippines.

- It's the rules, stupid, says Lacson to 'condescending' senator lawyer (2026-05-27 01:43)

MANILA, Philippines — Sen. Panfilo Lacson took a dig at a colleague who belittled another for her lack of "legal background" at Tuesday night's plenary, marked by a walkout of the minority bloc. While Lacson did not name the senator, he was referring to Sen. Rodante Marcoleta who berated Sen. Risa Hontiveros during a debate on amending the rules to allow voting through video conferencing. "In a condescending tone, a colleague, who is a lawyer took issue with Sen[ator] Hontiveros' lack of 'legal background.' I have a simple message — it's the rules stupid," Lacson said in a separate X post. Lacson also said that the walkout of the minority bloc Tuesday night demonstrated how to score a victory "by retreating." The group walked out of the plenary to object to the majority bloc's move "to rush" amending the Senate rules as they sought for more deliberations. In a joint statement, the 11-member minority group said they walked out because "what happened on the floor looked less like orderly deliberation." The minority is composed of Senators Vicente Sotto III, Bam Aquino, JV Ejercito, Win Gatchalian, Risa Hontiveros, Panfilo Lacson, Lito Lapid, Kiko Pangilinan, Erwin Tulfo, Raffy Tulfo, and Migz Zubiri. "They may have superior numbers but we have the rules on our side," Lacson wrote on X. The controversy stemmed from a proposal Marcoleta to permit senators to vote electronically and participate remotely in Senate proceedings. The measure was first raised on May 11 following the return of Sen. Ronald dela Rosa, who had been absent for six months and was reportedly facing an arrest warrant issued by the International Criminal Court (ICC). The proposal was referred to the Senate Committee on Rules before being brought to the plenary on Tuesday. However, minority senators questioned the legitimacy of the process, arguing that the committee had not yet been formally constituted following the recent reorganization of Senate leadership and committee assignments. Lacson led the opposition, asking whether the Committee on Rules had been properly formed before the measure was elevated to the plenary. "Has the Committee on Rules been formed?" Lacson asked, noting that all Senate leadership posts and committee memberships had recently been vacated. Senate President Alan Peter Cayetano defended the move, citing Rule 51 of the Senate rules, which allows amendments through a motion approved by a majority vote of senators present during session. Lacson, however, challenged the procedure, questioning whether the Senate was “neglecting the committees” by bypassing the normal review process. “The Committee on Rules has no members because we vacated all positions,” Lacson emphasized.

MANILA, Philippines — The Philippine Space Agency (PhilSA) confirmed that the bright light captured in Mayon Volcano on May 25 was a meteor. This comes after a video released by the Philippine Institute of Volcanology and Seismology (PHIVOLCS) went viral, showing a bright streak of light at the slopes of the volcano as volcanic activities continue. “The event was visually striking, with the Mayon Volcano at the foreground of Phivolcs’ video capture,” PhilSA said in a statement. The agency said that while meteors entered the Earth’s atmosphere daily, most burn up completely before reaching the ground. Phivolcs also clarified that the meteor did not hit the volcano.

- Central Visayas lawmakers, mayors lead governance poll (2026-05-27 01:31)

MANILA, Philippines — A governance survey placed several officials in Central Visayas at the top of its performance rankings, reflecting strong public confidence amid rising expectations for accountability, service delivery, and government modernization. The Index of Governance (IOG) survey conducted by the RPMD Foundation Inc. rated district representatives based on legislative performance, constituent service, accessibility, responsiveness, and overall public service delivery. City mayors were assessed on leadership, fiscal management, anti-corruption initiatives, digital governance, infrastructure development, disaster response, peace and order, environmental programs, and social services. RPMD said the IOG combined trust ratings and performance indicators to measure leadership effectiveness and citizen confidence. Dr. Paul Martinez, RPMD executive director, said the survey did not measure popularity alone but focused on governance delivery, responsiveness, accessibility, and public trust. The survey was conducted from April 1 to 8, 2026, involving 5,000 respondents from various socioeconomic classes interviewed face-to-face. It carries a ± 1 percent margin of error at a 95 percent confidence level.

District representatives in the “Tier 1” category, leading congressional performers were: Rep. Emmarie “Lolypop” Ouano-Dizon of Mandaue City – 87.8 percent, Rep. Junard “Ahong” Chan of Lapu-Lapu City – 87.3 percent, Rep. Karen Garcia of Cebu’s 3rd District – 85.2 percent, Rep. Daphne Lagon of Cebu’s 6th District – 83.5 percent. RPMD said the results were driven by strong public trust, visibility, and consistent response to local concerns.

In the second tier, rankings included Rep. Rhea Gullas (86.9 percent), Rep. Edu Rama (86.4 percent), and Rep. Duke Frasco (84.8 percent), reflecting strong constituent engagement. Completing the Central Visayas list were Rep. Edsel Galeos (82.7 percent), Rep. Patsy Calderon (82.2 percent), and Rep. Sun Shimura (80.7 percent).

In Bohol, Rep. Alexie Tutor led with 80 percent, followed by Rep. Vanvan Aumentado (77 percent), Rep. Baba Yap (75.2 percent), and Rep. Cutie del Mar (70.9 percent). RPMD cited strong emphasis on accessibility and grassroots service.

City mayors: In the mayoral rankings, three officials were statistically tied under Tier 1: Mayor Thadeo Jovito “Jonkie” Ouano of Mandaue City – 85.2 percent, Mayor Samsam Gullas of Talisay City – 84.7 percent, Mayor Cindi Chan of Lapu-Lapu City – 83.5

percent Their ratings were driven by leadership performance, fiscal discipline, anti-corruption initiatives, digitalization efforts, infrastructure programs, disaster response, and service delivery. Other rankings included: Mayor Nestor Archival of Cebu City – 81.9 percent Mayor Joie Perales of Toledo City – 81.1 percent Mayor Val Chiong of Naga City – 79.1 percent Mayor Jane Yap of Tagbilaran City – 77.7 percent Mayor Mayel Martinez of Bogo City – 75.2 percent Mayor Nito Durano of Danao City – 71.8 percent Mayor Patrick Barcenas of Carcar City – 70.7 percent RPMD said the results reflected growing public demand for governance anchored on performance, accountability, modernization, and visible public service delivery.

- LPA turns into tropical depression, to enter PAR Thursday as ‘Domeng’ (2026-05-26 21:54)

MANILA, Philippines – The low pressure area (LPA) has intensified into a tropical depression which has been forecast to enter the Philippine Area of Responsibility (PAR) on Thursday and would be named ‘Domeng,’ according to the state-run weather agency. Nathaniel Servando, Philippine Atmospheric Geophysical and Astronomical Services Administration (Pagasa) chief, said the weather disturbance was estimated at 1,230 kilometers east of northeastern Mindanao while moving west-northwestward at 10 kilometers per hour (kph). “It may enter PAR on Thursday afternoon or evening and would be given the local name Domeng, the 4th storm to be hitting the country this year,” Servando said. Forecast to reach a typhoon category on Saturday while over the Philippine Sea, it was, however, less likely to make landfall over the archipelago, according to the Pagasa administrator. The highest wind signal that may be raised during the passage of this tropical cyclone would only be Signal No. 1, the national weather bureau said. Meanwhile, several areas in Mindanao including Zamboanga Peninsula, Lanao del Norte, Misamis Occidental, and Palawan in Luzon would likely have cloudy skies with scattered rains and thunderstorms due to a weather system called the southwesterly wind flow. The rest of Mindanao would be experiencing overcast skies with scattered rains and thunderstorms due to the effect of the trough of the tropical depression outside PAR, the latest Pagasa bulletin said. On one hand, Metro Manila and the rest of the country would be experiencing partly cloudy to cloudy skies with isolated rain showers or thunderstorms due to the localized thunderstorms, it added.

• Maika Monroe, much more than 'Scream Queen,' returns to Cannes (2026-05-26 21:08)

CANNES, France — Maika Monroe's career essentially began at the Cannes Film Festival. Her breakthrough role in “It Follows” premiered in Cannes' Critics Week sidebar in 2014. “I was a newbie,” recalls Monroe. “I'm pretty sure I spent my 21st birthday here. I was like: ‘Well isn't that exciting, to turn 21 in a country where I could have drank in for years.’ ” “It Follows,” about a sexually transmitted curse, was part of a new wave of probing, atmospheric horror films. But then, it was a small $1.3 million indie movie that had little reason to expect a Cannes launch. “It was surreal. You never expect going into making a film that this will happen,” Monroe said in an interview on the rooftop of Cannes' Palais des Festivals. “But especially for that film. It was such a tiny, indie horror film. At that point, there really wasn't genre at this festival.” That has changed, though. Horror, science fiction and even slasher films have increasingly shown up in Cannes. This year, that included Jane Schoenbrun's “Teenage Sex and Death at Camp Miasma,” the Korean monster-sci-fi-mashup “Hope” and the gothic thriller “Victorian Psycho,” starring Monroe as an unhinged governess. On the surface, “Victorian Psycho,” which premiered Thursday in Cannes' Un Certain Regard section, appears to extend Monroe's reputation as the preeminent “Scream Queen” of her generation. Along with “It Follows,” she's been at the center of horror films like 2022's “Watcher” and 2024's “Longlegs.” But Monroe's range as an actor far exceeds any neat genre identification. She brought Hitchcockian depth to “Watcher” and psychological intensity to “Longlegs.” Bodies get bloody in “Victorian Psycho,” too, but Monroe's deranged protagonist is archly hysterical. She's a hoot. As much as Monroe may be associated with horror, she might be even better at comedy. In the gleefully morbid “Victorian Psycho,” she finally turns the tables. After years spent fleeing serial killers and worse, Monroe is on the offensive. “I didn't know if I could pull it off. I decided to take the leap,” Monroe says.

“Man, it was just so much fun. There’s so much freedom in this role. It will definitely be the character I’ll miss the most.” In Zachary Wigton’s “Victorian Psycho,” which Bleecker Street will release Sept. 25 in theaters, Monroe plays Winifred Notty. In the 1850s, she arrives at the Ensor House, the grand manor of the Pounds family, to serve as the eager governess to two children. It doesn’t take long for the children to realize she has a screw loose. But Winifred is comically chipper, even when deranged and over the top. As distant as the part might be from Monroe — a Santa Barbara, California, native here doing a British accent for the first time — it’s the first role to really capture Monroe’s natural comic energy. “I’ve never done anything remotely close to a role like this,” Monroe says. “I’m usually more introverted and internal with my roles, and this is very outward.” Almost always in “Victorian Psycho,” Winifred is grinning. That came from one of Monroe’s heroes. “One of my favorite actors is Jack Nicholson. I think every project he does he’s fascinating,” Monroe says. “Of course in ‘The Shining,’ he’s pretty much smiling through the whole thing, through all the pain and the anguish. That was a huge influence.” Monroe is also a professed fan of Olivia Colman’s. And it’s easy to see how wildly mischievous characters, like those often played by Colman or Nicholson, might be even more in Monroe’s wheelhouse than horror. It’s enough to make you wonder: does she ever chafe at the term “Scream Queen?” “Some of the films I’m most proud of are in this space of genre,” she says. “I can’t be mad at it. I’m so proud of ‘It Follows,’ ‘Longlegs,’ ‘Watcher.’ So, what can you do?” But if a certain side of Monroe has been rarely seen on screen, “Victorian Psycho” lets it out. “In the Victorian era, there was suppression. In this industry, I can find that I need to present a certain way or come across a certain way,” Monroe says. “You have to suppress certain things and not say certain things. That’s what was such a joy in this.”

- What tastes like a Korean pancake and is purple all over? An Oreo inspired by K-pop group BTS \(2026-05-26 20:58\)

NEW YORK — Oreo is teaming up with K-pop supergroup BTS for a bit of marketing dynamite that capitalizes on consumers’ growing interest in global flavors. Mondelez, Oreo’s parent company, said Tuesday that BTS-themed Oreos will go on sale June 1 online and June 8 in stores. The cookies, which feature purple wafers in a nod to the band’s signature color, will be sold in more than 80 markets around the world, making the partnership the brand’s biggest to date. The band also designed 13 embossments for the wafers, including the names of the seven members and an outline of the light stick that fans hold at BTS concerts. The white-and-tan creme center of the sandwich cookies was formulated to taste like hotteok, a warm, brown sugar-stuffed pancake that’s a popular Korean street food. “For Oreo to be the first snacking brand we’ve collaborated with globally is a huge honor. We ate them as kids, we eat them in the studio and now Oreo is helping us share a taste of home with the world,” BTS said in a statement. BTS Oreos will be sold for a limited time. Chicago-based Mondelez wouldn’t say how many packages it’s making. Martin Renaud, Mondelez’s chief marketing and sales officer, said the BTS cookies strike a balance of staying true to Korean culture and food while remaining consistent with Oreo’s brand and flavoring. “You want to be authentic, you want to be differentiated and live an experience. But when you are Oreo, you need to be pleasing a large group of people,” Renaud told The Associated Press. “You cannot come up with something that will be liked only by 20% of the population because it would alienate some of our customers.” Renaud said Oreo spent around two years developing the BTS cookie, eventually narrowing the possible flavors to three before settling on hotteok. “I think Korean food is an incredible cuisine. I’m French, maybe I should not say that, but I believe it,” Renaud joked. BTS Oreos arrive at a time when consumers are increasingly eager to sample new and authentic global cuisines and flavors. Datassential, a food and beverage consulting company, said U.S. restaurants featuring global flavors — Asian and South American, specifically -- have been gaining market share since 2019. In Europe, West African restaurants are growing in popularity, the company said. Social media is spurring the international taste trend. There are more than 11,700 TikTok videos under the hashtag “hotteok,” for example. Seeking out global foods or learning to make them is a low-risk and low-cost way to enjoy other cultures, said Russell Zwanka, the director of the food marketing program at Western Michigan University. “You can experience the world without spending $2,000 on a ticket,” Zwanka said. Delivery services and speciality grocery stores like the Asian supermarket chain H Mart have also made it easier for consumers to sample international foods, he said. “People have a much more proactive stance on trying to find flavors they can attribute to certain regions of the world,” Zwanka said. “I think that’s beautiful. It’s way the world should be.” In recent years, Oreo has partnered with Coca-Cola, singer and actress Selena Gomez, and the K-pop girl band Blackpink, among others. The brand also offers limited-time flavors in specific markets, like cherry sakura in Japan and red bean paste in China. BTS is also no stranger to food collaborations. The band partnered with McDonalds in 2021 for a global meal promotion in 50 countries. BTS also worked with the Korean food companies Paldo and Hy to develop Arih, a line of noodles and drinks sold at Walmart. Renaud said partnerships and playful, interesting flavors help Oreo expand its appeal beyond families. “We want to be making sure we also keep our older children and Gen Zs and keep the brand up to date,” he said. Renaud said Oreo is already working on its next collaborations, which may or may not be as big as the BTS partnership. “We’re not obsessed to be more, more, more, more, markets. I think if we can, yes, let’s go for it,” he said. “But the key point is we need to be really resonating with the local culture.”

• Thousands still evacuated near Southern California chemical tank despite eased explosion fears (2026-05-26 20:53)

SANTA ANA, California — A crack relieved pressure in an overheated chemical tank in Southern California and averted a catastrophic explosion, but it's still not safe enough for 16,000 people who live closest to the aerospace plant to go home, authorities said Tuesday. The crisis forced 50,000 people to evacuate in the Orange County city of Garden Grove last week. Most returned home after the crack formed over the Memorial Day weekend but the risk of a small explosion or potential spill kept a third of the evacuation orders in place. Exposure to methyl methacrylate — a highly flammable chemical used to make plastics — can cause serious respiratory problems, neurological problems and irritation to the skin, eyes and throat, according to the federal Environmental Protection Agency. The tank contains 6,000 to 7,000 gallons (22,700 to 26,500 liters) of the chemical. Crews worked overnight at the GKN Aerospace Transparency Systems plant to ensure two nearby tanks were neutralized and would not be affected by the compromised tank, Orange County Fire Capt. Brian Yau said, adding that material from one of these two tanks was transferred to another that has a neutralizing agent. It's unclear what caused the tank to overheat. Crews were able to stop spraying cooling water on the tank once the interior temperature stabilized to 92 degrees F (33.3 degrees C), down from 100 degrees (37.7 degrees C) over the weekend, the fire department said Tuesday. The sprinkler system at the facility continues to douse the tank, and the company said its technical specialists and firefighters removed insulation from the tank to help cool it. Health officials sought to reassure people that it was safe to go home. "There was no contamination. There were no fumes," Orange County Health Director Regina Chinsio-Kwong said at a Monday news conference.

"There was not a leak. So it should be, you should feel comfortable going home even if you're across the street from that new zone line." Concern among residents Isabel Mendez, 34, on Tuesday still wasn't allowed back to her Garden Grove mobile home as it's too close to the plant. She was evacuated Thursday, then let back in overnight, and woke up to chaos outside Friday with authorities telling residents they had to get out immediately. Mendez said she broke out in a rash on her face and had tingling lips and a sore throat while she was getting ready to leave. Her symptoms disappeared a few hours later. She spent the first few days at a hotel, which was expensive. She said she is now staying with her mother north of Los Angeles. She hopes to return home soon but said she doesn't believe officials who have sought to assure people allowed back that it's safe. "Of course it is still dangerous," she said. Garden Grove Unified School District said last week it was shutting a dozen schools through what was supposed to be the last day of the school year on Wednesday but later said only three would remain closed Tuesday. It was unclear if they would reopen before the school year ends this week. Garden Grove is next to Anaheim, home to Disneyland's two theme parks, which were not under evacuation orders. Park officials said they were monitoring the incident and supporting employees impacted by the evacuations. Environmental risks remain. The South Coast Air Quality Management District will monitor the air for several months and the EPA will be checking sewer and storm drains for spills, Orange County Supervisor Janet Nguyen said. As the tank heated up, the chemical converted from liquid to gas, ramping up the pressure and explosion risk, said Andrew Whelton, a Purdue University engineering professor who has studied environmental contamination. Some of the methyl methacrylate may already have hardened into a stable plastic similar to plexiglass, reducing the danger, he said. The tank could eventually cool enough for crews to safely stabilize and drain the remaining material without triggering a spark or ignition, Whelton said. However, he said there is still a risk of an explosion while the chemical remains hot and reactive. Temperatures need to fall closer to 60 to 70 degrees Fahrenheit (15.6 to 21.1 degrees C) before conditions are considered significantly safer, he said. GKN is a British company that supplies aircraft manufacturers. GKN Aerospace Transparency Systems makes cockpit windows, canopies and windshields for military and commercial aircraft. It employs about 16,000 people across 32 manufacturing sites in 12 countries, according to the company website. “We apologize for the ongoing disruption this incident is causing and our priority remains its safe resolution, so that residents can return to their homes as quickly as possible,” the company said. GKN Aerospace agreed in 2025 to pay state regulators more than $900,000 to settle violations involving recordkeeping, permitting issues and nitrogen oxide emissions, according to a report on the South Coast Air Quality Management District website.

- Argentina seizes 700 trafficked marine animals shipped from Kenya (2026-05-26 20:42)

NAIROBI, Kenya — Argentine authorities have seized more than 700 marine animals trafficked from Kenya in what conservationists describe as a major bust of exotic aquatic wildlife destined for the ornamental pet trade. The seizure took place on April 26 at Ezeiza International Airport near Buenos Aires in an operation involving Argentina’s Environmental Control Brigade, customs officials, the agricultural health agency, wildlife conservation group International Fund for Animal Welfare and rehabilitation group Fundación Temaikèn. Authorities said the shipment included tropical marine fish and invertebrates commonly sought for aquariums and exotic collections, including surgeonfish, puffer fish, lionfish, butterflyfish, octopuses, crabs and starfish. Many of the animals arrived dead after 120 hours in transit from Kenya, while others showed severe signs of stress and shock, conservationists said. The scale of the seizure forced Fundación Temaikèn, the only institution in Argentina equipped to receive confiscated marine wildlife of this kind, to rapidly establish an emergency rescue operation at its facilities in Escobar, north of Buenos Aires. Veterinarians and wildlife specialists worked for more than 28 hours to stabilize surviving animals. Workers adapted existing facilities and installed 10 additional tanks equipped with heating, filtration and water-conditioning systems for tropical marine species. “Many of these animals were extracted from reef ecosystems and arrived at the limit of survival, after spending days inside transport bags and boxes before the rescue could be carried out,” Cristian Gillet, wildlife director at Fundación Temaikèn, said in a statement. Because the animals were packed individually in hundreds of plastic bags, rescue teams carried out drip acclimation procedures one by one to gradually adjust them to new water conditions and reduce physiological shock caused by sudden temperature and salinity changes. Specialists also used a triage system to prioritize critically weakened animals for treatment while other teams identified species and separated living specimens from dead ones. Wildlife trafficking experts say the global trade in ornamental marine species is expanding as demand grows for exotic pets and home aquariums. Conservation groups warn that the trade can damage fragile reef ecosystems and expose animals to high mortality during capture and transport. “This is an industrialized crime,” said Christian Plowman of IFAW. “Moving 709 animals comprising 102 species across international cargo routes, packed in bags for 120 hours of transit, is not something done casually. It requires coordination along every link of the chain.” Plowman also said that this is the third seizure in a year by the Argentine authorities at the same entry point, which is not a coincidence but an established commercial route. “Traffickers identify and exploit corridors that work until enforcement disrupts the model. This interception — and the two before it — should be understood as intelligence, not just seizures. They are telling us something important about where the networks are operating and how.” The animals remain under specialized care while Argentine authorities determine their long-term fate. Officials have not said who was responsible for the shipment or whether arrests were made. Officials from the Kenya Wildlife Service did not immediately respond to The Associated Press’ requests for comment.

- Mexico's president sees 'no issue' with her country hosting Iran's World Cup team during tournament (2026-05-26 20:28)

MEXICO CITY — Mexican President Claudia Sheinbaum said on Monday that she has “no issue” with her country hosting Iran's World Cup team after its training base was moved from the United States to Mexico for the summer soccer competition. The team will still play its group stage matches in the U.S. but its base has been moved to Tijuana, Mexico, just south of San Diego, California, a move that Iran's soccer federation announced recently and that was formally confirmed by FIFA, the sport's governing body, on Monday. Moving the training base comes against the backdrop of the war in Iran, which the U.S. and Israel launched on Feb. 28. Sheinbaum said at a news conference Monday that she was told by a FIFA representative the U.S. was reluctant to have the Iranian soccer team spend time outside the games on U.S. territory. “The United States doesn’t want the Iranian national team to stay overnight in the United States,” Sheinbaum told reporters. She said a FIFA representative had then asked, “Can they stay overnight in Mexico?” “And we said, ‘Yes, no problem. We have no issue with that,’” she said. Iran's soccer team is slated to play matches in Inglewood, California, against New Zealand on June 15 and against Belgium six days later, before facing Egypt on June 26 in Seattle. Before the war broke out, the team was originally planned to set up its base in Tucson, Arizona. But with tensions simmering, Iran's team moved its base to Tijuana in Mexico, Sheinbaum said, confirming an announcement by the Iranian federation over the weekend. The federation said the Iranians had received approval from FIFA, which made the move official on Monday when it released the lists of all 48 base camp sites. Teams use base camps to train before and after matches. This year’s World Cup runs from June 11 to July 19 and will be co-hosted by the U.S., Canada and Mexico. The possibility of a move had simmered for months in the uncertainty surrounding the war in the Middle East and security concerns. U.S. sanctions on Iran were likely to only make the team’s stay in the U.S. more complex. The U.S. State Department said in a statement on Monday that President Donald Trump had made it clear the Iranian team was welcome to participate in the tournament. The department’s statement did not address where the team might stay, or Sheinbaum's comments. Sheinbaum said that her government was working with FIFA to hash out all the details before the competition.

- Knicks fans forget about the bad times and savor a record run to their first NBA Finals since 1999 (2026-05-26 19:58)

NEW YORK — The song selection at the New York Knicks' watch party couldn't have been more obvious. Minutes after the Knicks finished their four-game sweep of the Cleveland Cavaliers in the Eastern Conference finals, the DJ at Radio City Music Hall played Prince's “1999.” That was the last time the Knicks had reached the NBA Finals. And as fans sang along to, “So tonight I’m gonna party like it’s 1999,” they could forget the more than a quarter of a century of mostly bad years since and enjoy therecord-setting run the current team is on. “There is no precedent right now as far as point differential. That’s how good this Knicks team is,” said Ari Levine, who was carrying part of a broom as the Knicks swept their second straight series. He’s right. The Knicks have outscored Atlanta, Philadelphia and Cleveland by a combined 262 points during their playoff winning streak, the largest margin in any 11-game span in NBA history. They will try to continue it against Oklahoma City or San Antonio in the NBA Finals. Fans seemed to have a clear preference for Victor Wembanyama and the Spurs as they poured out of the famous Manhattan venue onto city streets, chanting “We want Wemby! We want Wemby!” But whether it’s him or the defending champion Thunder, Knicks fans believe the run will continue. “We’re taking everything! We’re taking the whole thing!” rapper Fat Joe posted on Instagram from the court in Cleveland, where he was one of the Knicks’ celebrity fans who made the trip. It wasn’t that long ago when fans had no reason for such confidence. The Knicks went 17-65 in 2018-19, the worst record in the league, during a stretch when they had a losing record for seven straight seasons. “That year we won 17 games I thought we had reached rock bottom,” longtime fan Anthony Mills said at the Radio City party. “I wasn’t sure that we could ever get this back again.” He became a Knicks fan when Bernard King was playing for them in the mid-1980s, a decade removed from their second and most recent championship in 1973. The drought is now so long he believes if the Knicks end it this season, star guard Jalen Brunson would earn a spot among New York’s most fabled champions. “If Jalen Brunson wins this championship, he should be Joe Namath. And if you’re old enough, you understand what Joe Namath means,” Mills said, referring to the iconic quarterback who guaranteed the New York Jets would beat the favored Baltimore Colts in the third Super Bowl in 1969, and then delivered. Brunson’s team, like Namath’s, will be the underdog. But the Knicks sure aren’t playing like one. “This team is hungry and they know what it would mean to this city,” Mills said. “They’re going to win the championship.”

- Yomiuri Giants baseball manager Abe resigns after arrest over allegedly assaulting his daughter (2026-05-26 19:32)

TOKYO — Shinnosuke Abe has resigned as manager of Japan’s storied baseball team Yomiuri Giants after being arrested for the alleged assault of his teenage daughter. The 47-year-old Abe, who was later released, apologized “for causing trouble because of my family matters” at a news conference on Tuesday where he announced he was stepping down as manager. The Yomiuri newspaper, which owns the team, said Abe allegedly grabbed his 18-year-old daughter by the collar and threw her down to the floor as he tried to stop her fighting with her younger sister at home in Tokyo on Monday. The daughter, whose name has not been released, then contacted a child guidance center after asking artificial intelligence app ChatGPT what to do, she said in a statement released Tuesday. To her surprise, she said, the child center reported the alleged incident to police and police showed up at their house hours later. “I broke down in tears seeing my father apprehended,” she said. She said she was not injured and that she and her father reconciled, so “please do not worry.” Yomiuri said Abe admitted to the allegation against him and was quoted as saying that he lost his temper when he saw the two girls fighting. Abe led the Central League in batting average and RBIs in 2012, and reached 2,000 career hits in 2017. He retired in 2019 and became team manager in 2024. Offensive chief coach Hideki Hashigami has been appointed acting manager, the Giants said.

- BP ousts chairman over 'serious' governance concerns (2026-05-26 18:51)

LONDON — British oil giant BP unexpectedly removed Albert Manifold as chairman on Tuesday after less than one year in the role, citing “serious concerns” about governance standards, oversight and conduct at the company. “The board has been surprised and disappointed to learn of governance oversight and conduct issues it deems unacceptable and has taken decisive action,” Amanda Blanc, a senior independent director at BP, said in a statement. The company did not give specific details of the alleged conduct and declined to comment further. The news sent BP’s share price sliding nearly six percent, topping the losers’ board in the FTSE 100 index in afternoon trading at the London stock exchange. Board member Ian Tyler has been appointed interim chairman with immediate effect. Manifold became chairman in October last year as BP focused on pivoting back to its more profitable oil and gas business, slashing clean energy investments. “Albert has helped bring a welcome focus and pace to BP’s transformation,” Blanc said in the statement. However, he “should no longer serve as chair and director with immediate effect. This follows serious concerns raised to the board”, the group added. According to anonymous sources quoted by the Financial Times, other directors viewed Manifold as too aggressive and believed he exerted excessive control over the company. - More turmoil -BP faced a shareholder backlash at its annual meeting last month as investors rejected a resolution that would have reduced its climate reporting requirements. Some of the investor discontent was directed at Manifold, with just 82 percent of shareholders voting in favour of his election -- below the near-unanimous support typically received by directors. “He was considered a hands-on and controversial chair,” said Kathleen Brooks, research director at trading group XTB. “The fact that Manifold has left so soon raises genuine concerns about HR policies at BP, and the corporate culture,” said Brooks, adding that the lack of stability signals “bad news” for shareholders. His departure is the latest leadership shakeup after company outsider Meg O’Neill became chief executive in April, with a mission of implementing a recovery plan for the group. BP reported a sharp increase in profits in the first quarter as crude oil prices soared amid the Middle East war. “The board and leadership team have deep conviction in the strategic direction we have laid out, and the company is moving at pace to deliver it,” Tyler said Tuesday. “BP is building a track record of strong underlying operational performance and a tight focus on financial discipline -- all in the pursuit of growing shareholder value and returns,” he said. - ‘Boardroom controversy’ -Manifold had replaced Helge Lund, who departed after a major reset at the British energy giant that saw it shelve carbon-reduction targets to focus on fossil fuel output. Under Lund, BP chief executive Bob Dudley departed in early 2020, replaced by Bernard Looney, who was sacked over his failure to disclose past relationships with colleagues. “Unfortunately this is not the first time that BP has been embroiled in boardroom controversy, which could be one of the reasons for the outsize share price fall," Richard Hunter, head of markets at Interactive Investor, told AFP on Tuesday. "At the operational level, the CEO and board remain in place which should enable the strategy to be pursued, although ironically Manifold had been seen as being a strong contributor to the group's recent turnaround," Hunter said. "Some uncertainty may remain until the details leading to the departure are known, but in acting swiftly and decisively the board may have removed any doubts as to whether the shortcomings are more widely spread across the group," he added.

- Senate minority bloc explains walkout (2026-05-26 17:28)

MANILA, Philippines — The Senate minority bloc on Tuesday night said they walked out to condemn what appears to be an attempt to "rush" a major change in the Senate rules without enough deliberation on the matter. In a joint statement, the 11-member minority group said they walked out because "what happened on the floor looked less like orderly deliberation." The minority is composed of Senators Vicente Sotto III, Bam Aquino, JV Ejercito, Win Gatchalian, Risa Hontiveros, Panfilo Lacson, Lito Lapid, Kiko Pangilinan, Erwin Tulfo, Raffy Tulfo, and Migz Zubiri. The group said that several of their members "still wanted to speak and raise serious questions on the floor." "What's the rush? What's the reason for dividing the house if there are still senators who are asking about the process?" they said. "Was the rule change being rushed because they wanted to allow Senator Bato [Dela Rosa]? Now there are reports that some majority senators might be arrested," the minority said.

- Explosion damages tanker off Oman marine monitor (2026-05-26 16:47)

DUBAI — An explosion damaged a tanker close to its waterline as it sailed off Oman, a marine monitor said Tuesday, as tensions remained high around the blockaded Strait of Hormuz. "The crew and vessel are safe, although the master reports some bunker fuel has discharged into the sea," UK Maritime Trade Operations said. The incident, in the Gulf of Oman about 60 nautical miles east of Muscat, was an "external explosion", UKMTO added, without detailing the cause of the blast. Iran has been laying mines in waters nearby as part of its campaign to block Hormuz, which normally carries one-fifth of global oil production. Hours earlier, US forces launched overnight strikes on missile sites in Iran and on boats that they said were trying to lay mines in Gulf waters.

- Drone strike on Sudan border town kills at least 14 survivor, official (2026-05-26 16:28)

KHARTOUM, Sudan — A drone strike blamed on the paramilitary Rapid Support Forces killed 14 people, mostly women, in the Sudanese town of Al-Tina, on the border with Chad, a survivor of the attack and a government official told AFP on Tuesday. Locals who rushed to bury the dead "found 14 bodies at the bomb site, most of them women," the survivor said, using a satellite internet connection to circumvent a communications blackout. Requesting anonymity for their safety, they said the attack on Monday "targeted a gathering of women selling food and tea in the Al-Tina market." Deadly attacks on civilian sites including markets are common in the war between Sudan's army and the RSF, which since April 2023 has killed tens of thousands. An exact toll is impossible to confirm but aid workers estimate over 200,000 people have been killed. A government official confirmed the attack and said authorities were "working to tally the number of casualties". Al-Tina on the border with Chad in the far west of the Darfur region, has come under regular attack from the RSF this year. The city is at imminent risk of famine, according to UN food security analysis, and thousands have fled across the border to Chad. The paramilitary last year consolidated its control on the Darfur region, but the Joint Forces, a coalition of armed groups fighting alongside the army, maintains enclaves near the border, including Al-Tina. Drone warfare has become an increasingly prominent feature of the war, with both sides deploying unmanned strikes across the country while keeping their depleted troops far from the frontlines. Between January and April, at least 880 civilians were killed in drone strikes, according to the United Nations. Now in its fourth year, the war has caused the world's largest hunger and displacement crises. In North Darfur state alone, where Al-Tina is located, 1.7 million people are displaced, and hundreds of thousands are on the brink of starvation.

- Marcoleta, Defensor barred from leaving (2026-05-26 16:17)

(UPDATE) THE Sandiganbayan Seventh Division on Tuesday issued a precautionary hold departure order against Sen. Rodante Marcoleta, former lawmaker Michael Defensor, Aristotle Viray and Joseph Espiritu. Earlier on Tuesday, the court conducted a hearing on the Ombudsman's application for the issuance of a precautionary hold departure order against the four. "Respondents pose a clear and substantial flight risk," the application filed by the Office of the Ombudsman on Monday read. "Undoubtedly, respondents are aware of possible criminal charges against them that could result in restraint of liberty and imposition of substantial fines. This provides a compelling motive to evade this jurisdiction before the criminal process can fully take hold," it read. Ombudsman field investigators filed a complaint before the Office of the Ombudsman against the four individuals last May 18, alleging that "Marcoleta's acceptance of gifts with an aggregate amount of P75 million on three separate occasions constitute the crime of plunder." "Aside from the lack of a clear purpose or pending transaction for which the amounts received may be a consideration, there is no showing that the gifts would still be given were it not for Respondent's position on government. Hence it cannot be denied that the P75 Million was given by Respondents Defensor, Espiritu and Viray by reason of Respondent Marcoleta's office," the investigators said. Aside from wanting the Ombudsman's office to file a plunder case in court against Marcoleta, Defensor, Espiritu and Viray, the investigators wanted the same office to file three indirect bribery cases against the senator. Investigators said Marcoleta, Defensor, Espiritu and Viray should also be charged for violation of Presidential Decree 46, which makes it punishable for any public official or employee to receive, directly or indirectly and for private persons to give, or offer to give, any gift or present to such officials or employees for past favors, or the expectation of favors or better treatment in the future from the public official or employee concerned in the discharge of his official functions. The application said that the respondents' "involvement" suggested "access to significant financial resources" and that "a person with access to substantial... financial resources possess a far greater capacity to abruptly leave the country, sustain himself abroad and evade prosecution for an extended period.” In an order dated May 21, 2026, the Office of the Ombudsman gave the respondents 15 days from receipt of its order to file counter-affidavits. Marcoleta said in a post on Facebook that the complaint was “without evidence of public injury, official favor, corrupt consideration or abuse of office.” “There was no illegal act, no corrupt transaction, no favor sought and absolutely no conspiracy to commit any crime,” Defensor said. The investigators said Marcoleta on Jan. 6, 2025, received P30 million from Defensor which was “evidenced by a donor’s tax return and a... deposit slip showing that Defensor paid the donor’s tax” on Dec. 17, 2025. The investigators said that Marcoleta on Jan. 8, 2025, received P25 million from Espiritu which was “evidenced by a donor’s tax return and a... deposit slip showing that Espiritu paid the donor’s tax” on Dec. 15, 2025. The investigators said Marcoleta on Jan. 9, 2025, received P20 million from Viray. The investigators said that Marcoleta, in his statement of contributions and expenditures for the 2025 election, declared no cash or in-kind donation. The investigators said the Commission on Elections had conducted its own investigation of the donations made to Marcoleta, but dismissed a disqualification case against him because the donations were made before the start of the campaign period.

- Duterte justices wanted to grant dela Rosa TRO (2026-05-26 16:15)

(UPDATE) THE Supreme Court’s 9-5-1 vote denying Sen. Ronald Dela Rosa’s plea for a temporary restraining order (TRO) against an International Criminal Court (ICC) arrest warrant exposed a sharp divide within the tribunal, with most justices insisting the judiciary must not become a refuge for fugitives. The five dissenting justices — all appointed by Rodrigo Duterte when he was president — warned the ruling could subject the senator to “irreparable injury.” In a special en banc session on May 20, the Court rejected Dela Rosa’s request for a TRO, status quo ante order or preliminary injunction that would have barred law enforcers from cooperating with any arrest based on an ICC warrant, International Criminal Police Organization notice or foreign judicial process absent a Philippine-issued warrant. The full resolution, including concurring and dissenting opinions, was made public on Monday, May 25. The Court clarified that it had ruled only on interim relief and that the main petition raising substantive constitutional issues remains pending. Not shield for fugitives Several justices in the majority took a hard-line stance against granting provisional protection, stressing that the judiciary should not be used to obstruct criminal accountability proceedings. Associate Justice Alfredo Benjamin Caguioa said the Court “should not come to the rescue” of an individual accused of mass violence, warning that granting relief would “prolong historical injustices” and undermine victims of the antidrug campaign. He argued that ICC arrest mechanisms do not require a separate Philippine warrant, citing provisions of the Rome Statute and maintained that determinations of probable cause in ICC cases fall under ICC judges, not domestic courts. Senior Associate Justice Marvic Leonen, in a separate opinion, emphasized that courts generally do not enjoin criminal proceedings in advance, noting that remedies remain available after arrest through proper legal channels such as habeas corpus. Associate Justice Maria Filomena Singh, meanwhile, invoked the “clean hands” doctrine, pointing to Dela Rosa’s alleged evasion of legal processes. She noted that he had surfaced to participate in Senate proceedings before going into hiding again. “This conduct shows that Senator Dela Rosa only engaged with the legal processes based on his convenience,” Singh wrote, adding that equitable relief cannot be granted where bad faith is apparent. Justice Rodil Zalameda anchored his concurrence on Republic Act 9851, known as the Philippine Act on Crimes Against International Humanitarian Law, Genocide and Other Crimes Against Humanity, citing its provision allowing Philippine authorities to surrender individuals to international tribunals, and stressed that the case also involves executive discretion in foreign relations. Caguioa further placed the case in the context of the previous administration’s antidrug campaign, citing Court-recognized figures of over 20,000 deaths. “The Court cannot become a refuge for impunity,” he said. Dissent: Risk of irreversible harm Five justices dissented, warning that denying injunctive relief exposed Dela Rosa to “irreparable injury” if arrested and transferred to The Hague without sufficient domestic legal safeguards. Justice Ramon Paul Hernando, who was appointed by President Rodrigo Duterte in 2019, argued there was no valid Philippine judicial process authorizing surrender to the ICC, stressing that any arrest based solely on a foreign warrant would lack domestic legal foundation. He warned that once Dela Rosa is turned over to foreign jurisdiction, any later remedy would be “inutile and illusory,” as the harm could no longer be reversed. Justice Amy Lazaro-Javier, another Duterte appointee, said the case required “a disciplined legal inquiry,” not one driven by public sentiment, and insisted that the right involved was not impunity but protection against unlawful deprivation of liberty. “The potential injury is juridical, concrete and irreparable,” she wrote, warning that failure to act would allow constitutional questions to be overtaken by events. Also a Duterte appointee, Justice Antonio Kho Jr. questioned the constitutionality of Section 17 of Republic Act 9851, arguing it lacks clear standards governing surrender to international tribunals and could amount to an excessive delegation of executive power. Justice Ricardo Rosario, also a Duterte appointee, maintained that ICC warrants have “no self-executing force” in the Philippines and require compliance with domestic judicial processes, including a determination of probable cause by a local judge. Duterte appointee Justice Henri Jean Paul Inting argued that a status quo ante order was necessary to preserve the Court’s authority, warning that without it, the case could be reduced to a “paper judgment.” Sharp institutional divide The competing opinions revealed a fundamental divide within the Court: the majority stressing judicial restraint and noninterference in enforcement of international obligations, while dissenters emphasized constitutional safeguards, due process and the risk of irreversible consequences once arrest and transfer occur. The majority maintained that Dela Rosa failed to establish a clear legal right or imminent irreparable injury, and that provisional relief cannot be used to preempt lawful enforcement actions. The dissenting bloc, however, warned that once a suspect is surrendered to a foreign tribunal, domestic courts effectively lose jurisdiction, making later remedies ineffective. The ruling does not resolve the wider constitutional questions surrounding the Philippines’ cooperation with the ICC, nor does it settle the validity or enforceability of the warrant itself. Those issues remain pending before the Court.

- Subpoenas issued in probe of fugitive senator's escape (2026-05-26 16:14)

THE Department of Justice (DOJ) has issued multiple subpoenas as part of its widening investigation into the escape of Sen. Ronald “Bato” Dela Rosa, who is wanted by the International Criminal Court (ICC), as well as allegations of obstruction of justice and concealment of persons of interest. Justice Secretary Fredderick Vida said in a media briefing on Tuesday that a special panel of prosecutors had ordered the production of records from the Senate, the Commission on Audit (COA) and the Philippine National Police (PNP)–Firearms and Explosives Office to establish a detailed documentary trail. Vida said a letter was also issued to lawyer Jimmy Bondoc, who earlier claimed knowledge of Dela Rosa’s whereabouts. He was asked to submit any information in his possession that could help authorities locate and arrest the fugitive senator. “This is an opportunity for him to cooperate with legal processes and assist law enforcement authorities in the proper service of the ICC warrant,” Vida said. He added that public claims of knowledge on a fugitive’s location would be carefully assessed, and that people making such statements may be required to substantiate them with evidence. Vida said the Office of the Senate Secretary was subpoenaed to submit internal security documentation, including entry and exit logs, personnel deployment records and reports from the Office of the Senate Sergeant-at-Arms. He said these documents are crucial in reconstructing movements within the Senate compound on May 13 and 14, when a shooting incident occurred and when Dela Rosa slipped out of the compound. “Every time a person enters the Senate, there is identification, time stamping and documentation. The same applies when they exit. We are requesting those records to establish a factual timeline,” he said. The DOJ also required the submission of a full inventory of firearms owned by the Senate, including issuance documents identifying which officials or employees were assigned specific weapons. Authorities said this includes verification of a firearm reportedly seen in circulating video footage, described as a “Scorpion” type weapon. Vida said the subpoenas aim to clarify accountability over weapons within government custody. “We are asking for the inventory of firearms owned by the Senate and the corresponding issuance documents to determine who had possession or control over these items,” he said. The COA was directed to submit audit records covering Senate assets, particularly firearms and other regulated equipment, to verify compliance with government property and accountability rules. In a parallel move, the PNP–Firearms and Explosives Office was ordered to produce records of firearms registered under the Senate, including ownership and licensing information. Vida said the coordinated subpoenas form part of a broader fact-finding effort tied to the enforcement of the ICC warrant, as well as the determination of whether obstruction of justice may have occurred. He cited provisions under obstruction laws that penalize concealing offenders, tampering with evidence, misleading authorities, witness interference and delaying legal proceedings. “If any of these acts are committed, they are punishable under the law. For public officials, there is an additional penalty of perpetual disqualification from holding public office,” Vida said. Vida said the authorities continue to treat the ICC warrant as valid and enforceable, and that operational efforts to locate Dela Rosa remain ongoing. He declined to provide details on the possible issuance of an International Criminal Police Organization Red Notice, saying such matters are handled operationally and not subject to public disclosure. “That goes into operational matters. We will not second-guess what the ICC is doing, but for Philippine jurisdiction, the warrant is valid and enforceable,” he said. Vida also addressed questions on whether other people, including Sen. Robinhood Padilla, could be included in the probe after public admissions that they helped transport the senator. He said the panel of prosecutors will evaluate all statements, admissions and factual circumstances to determine whether probable liability exists. “We will study everything. Based on admissions and factual circumstances, we assess whether there is a basis to conclude that a person may be liable,” he said. Vida said the investigation remains in its early stage, describing it as part of an ongoing case buildup. “This is still the initial phase. Evidence gathering is ongoing. Once we enter preliminary investigation, parties will be given full rights, including the opportunity to submit counter-affidavits,” he said. He said the DOJ remains open to receiving voluntary submissions from individuals who may have relevant information. “We are open not only to complainants or victims, but to anyone who can provide facts that will help us fulfill our mandate,” Vida said. On calls for a reward system for information on Dela Rosa’s whereabouts, Vida said there is currently no such plan, citing existing intelligence cooperation among law enforcement agencies. He also appealed to the senator to respect legal processes. “He is an incumbent senator and a former public official sworn to uphold the law. We are appealing for cooperation with the rule of law,” he said. Vida added that the DOJ stands ready to enforce the ICC warrant with the support of the National Bureau of Investigation (NBI) and the PNP, should operational directives require it. “We are always ready to fulfill our mandate for the country and for justice,” he said. Gun permits to be canceled The PNP on Tuesday said it has started canceling the firearms licenses under Dela Rosa’s name. PNP chief Gen. Jose Melencio Nartatez Jr. issued the statement in response to the earlier request made by the NBI to revoke the policeman-turned-lawmaker’s gun permits as he continues to evade arrest. Nartatez said there were more than 100 guns registered under Dela Rosa’s name. Dela Rosa first went into hiding in November 2025 amid rumors that he is the next to be turned over to the ICC after former president Rodrigo Duterte. He resurfaced on May 11 to cast a crucial vote that installed his ally Sen. Alan Peter Cayetano as Senate president. He then went into hiding again, after the ICC confirmed its issuance of a warrant for his arrest. He was named as an “indirect co-perpetrator” of Duterte in the killings connected to the bloody war on drugs. Duterte was arrested in March 2025 and sent to the ICC in The Hague, the Netherlands, to stand trial for crimes against humanity. News blackout The PNP on Tuesday said it will cease giving updates on Dela Rosa so as not to compromise the ongoing manhunt against the lawmaker. “We wish to inform all members of the media that, while we deeply value and respect the role of the press in keeping the public informed, we are now unable to provide further statements regarding the case of Sen. Bato Dela Rosa at this time,” PNP public information chief Col. Allen Rae Co told reporters during a briefing at Camp Crame. “The matter involves an active and ongoing law enforcement operation, and any premature disclosure of information may compromise the integrity of the proceedings and the safety of all parties involved,” he said. Police Maj. Gen. Robert Alexander Morico II, Criminal Investigation and Detection Group director, earlier said the police are not underestimating Dela Rosa’s capacity for intelligence given his decadeslong experience in law enforcement. “The mindset of Sen. Bato Dela Rosa is the same as the mindset of the Philippine National Police personnel who are active now. You must remember that he used to be a PNP officer,” Morico said in a press briefing last week. Firearms violation The Firearms License Revocation and Restoration Board (FLRRB) of the PNP said that even before the NBI request, they had conducted an investigation into Dela Rosa's guns. Police Lt. Col. Domer Tadeo of the FLRRB cited violations of Section 4G of Republic Act 10591, or the Comprehensive Firearms and Ammunition Regulation Act. Section 4G requires that an applicant should never have had any conviction or does not have a pending criminal case before any court of law for a crime that is punishable with a penalty of more than two years. Dela Rosa is now a subject of a nationwide manhunt as authorities implement an arrest warrant from the ICC for his role in the Duterte administration's drug war.

- Rescue efforts cease at collapsed building (2026-05-26 16:13)

(UPDATE) SEARCH and rescue operations shifted to retrieval and clearing, after rescuers found no signs of life among those trapped inside the collapsed nine-story building in Barangay Balibago, Angeles City. Bureau of Fire Protection Region 3 (Central Luzon) spokesman Fire Supt. Maria Leah Sajili said at 8:27 p.m. Monday that search and rescue efforts have been terminated after a decision was made in a briefing held by the Angeles City government, the Bureau of Fire Protection and the Pasig City government because no survivors could be detected at the site of the unfinished hotel building. Results from Pasig City's life locator equipment were consistent and final, indicating that there were no signs of life from the 16 other construction workers who were still missing. "Today (Tuesday), we are transitioning to [a] retrieval and clearing operation, as we from the Unified Command decided last night to cease the search and rescue operation," said Jay Pelayo, chief of Angeles Public Information Office, during a press briefing. Hours earlier, the scanner picked up signs of life, but it was later found to be from animals and the responders themselves. "We have done all the levels of verification, their findings are really consistent, because at first they were searching simultaneously so even rescuers on the other side were being picked up, resulting in cross-detection," Sajili said. In the wake of the collapse, four were confirmed dead, 16 were missing and 26 were rescued. Responders have begun removing scaffolding, steel and other obstacles from the collapsed building. Probe sought Sen. Francis Pangilinan sought an investigation into the collapse of the nine-story building and filed Resolution 406 calling for a review of the National Building Code and related regulations. Initial reports showed that the incident stemmed from unauthorized construction of an additional floor that may have weakened the building's structural integrity. Pangilinan said the probe aims to strengthen occupational safety standards and ensure accountability of concerned parties. "This accident underscored the need to immediately strengthen the implementation of safety regulations in the construction of buildings, whether public or private," he said in Filipino. "Because in the end, it is our fellowmen who would suffer from this negligence," Pangilinan added. "Our priority is the safety of our fellowmen." He said the inquiry seeks to establish whether negligence, substandard materials, unauthorized modifications, insufficient oversight or deficiencies in permitting, inspection, occupational safety enforcement and disaster preparedness contributed to the building collapse. Pangilinan called on relevant government agencies to provide immediate assistance, medical support, and transparent updates on rescue and recovery operations. “We owe it to the victims to present the truth regarding this incident and come up with laws and policies to avoid a repeat of this tragedy in the future,” Pangilinan said. Sen. Raffy Tulfo, meanwhile, filed Senate Bill 2158, or the proposed “New Philippine Building Act,” seeking to modernize the country’s building regulations and strengthen accountability in the construction industry amid growing concerns over public safety. The measure aims to replace Presidential Decree 1096, otherwise known as the “National Building Code of the Philippines,” which has remained in force since 1977. Tulfo said the nearly five-decade-old law no longer adequately addresses present-day construction practices, engineering technologies, disaster resiliency standards and urban development challenges. “The current building code is already outdated and no longer responsive to the demands of modern construction and public safety,” Tulfo said. The senator cited several recent construction-related incidents as justification for the urgent passage of the bill, including the collapse of a nine-story building under construction in Barangay Balibago, Angeles City, Pampanga, on May 24.

- Ombudsman to charge Estrada with plunder (2026-05-26 16:12)

(UPDATE) THE Office of the Ombudsman said on Tuesday it will file a flood control-related plunder case before the Sandiganbayan against Sen. Jinggoy Estrada. Ombudsman Jesus Crispin Remulla described the case to be “very ripe,” and said they could file the charges by Thursday. In the same briefing, Remulla said his office can soon file a separate plunder case against Sen. Joel Villanueva, though he did not give any particulars. Villanueva had been linked to the flood control bribery scandal, but has denied the allegations against him as “ridiculous.” “It is not just Senator Jinggoy. We are finishing another one, and we can file it really soon, the one against Sen. Joel Villanueva. That is another one that is ripe, but we need to thoroughly refine how all the information and evidence included are laid out,” Remulla said in Filipino and English. Estrada said he was clueless whether the planned move of the Ombudsman to file plunder charges against him was a form of harassment against some members of the Senate majority bloc. “No comment,” the senator said on Tuesday, adding that he would consult his lawyers about the matter. “If this is the price that I have to pay for standing on my own principles and what I believe in. So be it,” Estrada said in a chance interview. Asked whether politics was behind the filing of charges against him and other members of the Senate majority bloc, he said, “Your guess is as good as mine. I will still perform my duties.” “What I know is that the LBRMO (Legislative Budget Research and Monitoring Office) has said that I have no insertion contrary to what Bryce Hernandez divulged in the House [investigation on flood control budget scandal],” Estrada said in Filipino.

- House lawmakers clash with DOE over outages (2026-05-26 16:11)

LAWMAKERS at the House of Representatives challenged the Department of Energy (DOE) over the recurring red and yellow alerts, and rotational brownouts in the Luzon and Visayas grids, arguing that the core problem lies in insufficient power supply rather than transmission failures alone. During a joint hearing of the House Committees on Energy and Legislative Franchises, several members of the House pointed to generation shortfalls and plant outages as the main drivers of grid instability, even as DOE officials maintained that multiple factors affect system reliability. Cagayan de Oro 2nd District Rep. Rufus Rodriguez said records presented during the inquiry showed that the National Grid Corp. of the Philippines (NGCP) properly handled the May 13 transmission disturbance, restoring both affected 500-kilovolt lines within hours. Rodriguez said the Ilijan–Tayabas line was restored at 2:44 p.m., while the Dasmariñas–Ilijan line returned to service at 4:52 p.m., noting that grid operators acted within required protocols. “Clearly, NGCP performed its duty. They reported the incident, they fixed the lines, and they preserved the power supply that was available,” Rodriguez said. He added that ongoing alerts, particularly in the Visayas, point to continuing supply constraints rather than transmission-related faults. “Until now, there is still a Yellow Alert in the Visayas because many power plants are on outage,” he said. Rodriguez also questioned what he described as an attempt to assign blame solely to NGCP for extended grid alerts. “What is the fault of NGCP? They were able to preserve the power supply that was available,” he said. Murang Kuryente Party-list Rep. Mark Artur Yap echoed the same position, pressing DOE officials to explain whether reportorial compliance issues could be responsible for rotating brownouts. “To the DOE, are you trying to tell me that the entire explanation for rotating brownouts is that NGCP was not able to file its report on time?” Yap asked. He said the situation reflects a basic imbalance between supply and demand. “The real issue is supply and demand. If supply is more than enough, why are there rotating brownouts?” he said. Yap added that the recurring outages were better explained by generation deficiencies than administrative lapses. “Is it NGCP’s late report that is the reason, or is it lack of supply that is causing the brownout?” he said. Pangasinan 2nd District Rep. Mark Cojuangco, meanwhile, criticized the government’s long-term energy direction, particularly the growing reliance on renewable sources without sufficient baseload support. He questioned the reliability of solar energy during peak evening demand. “What happens at night when it comes to solar?” Cojuangco said, noting that solar facilities operate at low effective capacity over a 24-hour cycle. He also raised concerns over the current limitations of battery storage technology in addressing nighttime demand. “How will batteries meet the demand at night?” he said. Cojuangco argued that renewable energy was being oversold as a complete solution to the country’s power needs. “This is an example of marketing. The public is being misled about the capability of wind and solar,” he said. He further questioned recurring plant shutdowns, suggesting these may be linked to stressed generating units due to tight supply conditions. “I find it implausible that this happens in isolation. Maybe they are being forced to run at maximum capacity because supply is insufficient,” he said. The lawmaker also renewed criticism of the Electric Power Industry Reform Act (Epira), saying it has failed to ensure timely investments in new capacity. “Failure of Epira. There is no timely investment. When power is short, prices go up and profits go up,” Cojuangco said. He described the Philippine Energy Plan as unrealistic in its current form. “Bad policy. The Philippine Energy Plan is a dream. You are making the public hope for a failed dream,” he added. DOE officials acknowledged during the hearing that several plant outages following the May 13 incident were separate and not caused by NGCP transmission line trips. They also confirmed regular coordination with NGCP on grid advisories and system alerts. NGCP reiterated that both affected transmission lines were restored within hours and that grid stability was maintained during the disturbance. The grid operator also noted that supply conditions were tight prior to May 13, with around 1,728 megawatts (MW) of generating capacity in Luzon on forced outage or derated, while the Visayas had about 857 MW unavailable, placing the region under Yellow Alert even before the transmission incident. Historical grid data cited during the hearing showed that from 2016 to 2025, 235 out of 243 red alerts — equivalent to 96.7 percent — were linked to generation-related issues rather than transmission failures. Lawmakers said the data show a growing consensus that the country's recurring power disruptions stem primarily from inadequate and unreliable generation capacity, rather than grid transmission performance alone.

- Lacson dismisses Marcos' claims (2026-05-26 16:10)

SEN. Panfilo Lacson brushed off the claim of Sen. Imee Marcos that the minority bloc is seeking Charter amendments to change the age requirements for president and vice president from 40 to 50, to disqualify Vice President Sara Duterte from seeking the presidency in 2028. In a privilege speech on Monday, Marcos inserted a video wherein the narrator said that Senate Minority Leader Vicente Sotto III discussed Charter change with House Speaker Faustino Dy III to extend the terms of the president and vice president. "Nothing could be further from the truth because what I heard was that they wanted to bring down the age from 40 to 35," Lacson said. "How did they cook up that story along with their videos? That's simply not true," he added. Sen. Miguel Zubiri, part of the 11-member minority group, motioned to strike from the records the video, which he described as "horrible" and a "propaganda tool." Lacson and nine other blocmates supported Zubiri's motion. "So with that I support the motion of former Senate president and majority leader Juan Miguel Zubiri to strike off the record the portions that are offensive to our fellow senators," he said. Lacson noted that since last week, Marcos had claimed there was a supposed attempt to take control of the Senate leadership to pave the way for constitutional amendments to extend the terms of top government officials. "We talked about how to save the integrity, dignity and reputation of the Senate, and nothing else. To say that we aspire to take over the Senate leadership for Con-Ass (constitutional assembly), never!" he said at the plenary Monday. Lacson added that he witnessed a part of the conversation between Sotto and Dy where they discussed the speaker's proposal to increase the number of senators from 24 to 36 — and not to extend the terms of elected officials. He affirmed the manifestations by his colleagues in the minority that they never discussed Con-ass "in as many caucuses that we held or we had in different places."

- Louvre heist to be turned into film (2026-05-26 16:09)

PARIS — Last year's brazen robbery of the Louvre -- when thieves made off with jewellery worth some $100 million -- is set to become a movie, a publisher said on Tuesday. French director Romain Gavras -- whose work includes 2025 Hollywood film "Sacrifice" starring Anya Taylor-Joy and music videos including most recently a hypnotic schoolboy choreography for GENER8ION -- will draw inspiration from the investigative book "Main basse sur le Louvre" (literally "A grab at the Louvre"). Film rights to the book about the October 19, 2025 heist had been sold to the production company Iconoclast, the Flammarion publishing house said. The book, written by three journalists, from French dailies Le Parisien and Le Monde, and weekly glossy magazine Paris Match, is to hit bookstores on Wednesday. According to trade magazine Le Film Francais, the movie project is in development, though neither the title nor the cast has been announced. The Louvre heist sent shockwaves around the world and sparked a security crisis within the world-famous museum that ultimately led to the replacement of its director, Laurence des Cars. After seven months of investigation, and despite the arrests of the main suspects, the jewels have still not been found. The authors said their apparent disappearance "has become a dense mystery, a puzzle that has plunged investigators into deep confusion". The heist illustrates how "the theft of artworks has become a business like any other for many criminals", they say. "The criminal underworld has found a new cash cow."

- Fast approval of RE projects eyed (2026-05-26 16:09)

THE Department of the Interior and Local Government (DILG) urged local government units (LGUs) to expedite the approval process for renewable energy (RE) projects, amid energy supply challenges. In a statement issued on Tuesday, the DILG said the directive aims to remove bureaucratic delays and improve coordination between national government agencies and LGUs to accelerate the rollout of clean energy investments. RE projects covered by the policy include solar, wind, hydro, geothermal and biomass facilities, as well as energy storage systems and other infrastructure designed to produce sustainable power. Through a memorandum circular, the DILG introduced revised guidelines intended to simplify documentary requirements and clarify procedures for project proponents seeking local approval. The department said the measure is designed to eliminate redundant requirements and speed up processing times at the local level. Under the new directive, LGUs are required to issue a standardized Resolution of No Objection (RONO) through the Sangguniang Panlungsod or Sangguniang Bayan. The RONO will replace the previous Letter of No Objection issued by local chief executives and will serve as formal confirmation of the LGU's support for proposed RE projects. The circular also limits the approval process to a maximum of three steps for applicants: submission of requirements, issuance of an order of payment and payment of fees together with release of the RONO. LGUs are required to act on renewable energy applications within 45 working days from receipt of complete documents. In cases of disapproval, LGUs must issue a written explanation and identify corrective measures that applicants may undertake.

- Marcos' Japan visit to boost ties in defense, energy, trade (2026-05-26 16:08)

PRESIDENT Ferdinand Marcos Jr. left on Tuesday for a four-day state visit to Japan, where he is expected to discuss increased collaboration in key areas of interest including defense, maritime security and energy resilience. His visit, upon the invitation of the Japanese government, coincides with this year's commemoration of the 70th anniversary of the normalization of diplomatic relations between the Philippines and Japan.” This visit seeks to further strengthen the bonds of friendship with a close neighbor, like-minded and future-oriented just like us in many ways, and a most reliable partner in times of both prosperity and times of uncertainty, such as today’s ongoing oil crisis,” the president said during the send-off ceremony held at the Villamor Airbase in Pasay City.” During this trip, I hope to harness the positive trajectory of our relations with Japan in all of our enriching engagements,” he added. Marcos said he would actively pursue and cultivate collaboration in priority areas such as agriculture, energy and decarbonization, maritime cooperation, trade and investment, infrastructure, defense and security, space technology and the development of Mindanao. He will likewise advance the Philippines’ interests in the West Philippine Sea, the ongoing conflict in the Middle East, the Association of Southeast Asian Nations, the cooperation with the United States and the Philippines’ candidature to the United Nations Security Council. Marcos is slated to meet with Prime Minister Takaichi Sanae for a comprehensive discussion on common interests meant to strengthen Philippines-Japan relations and what it could contribute to regional and global peace and prosperity.” It forms part of a broader foreign policy agenda to forge closer political ties, stronger defense and security cooperation, and more enduring economic partnerships with major countries in the region in order to advance the interests of the Filipino people, while promoting regional peace, stability and prosperity,” he said.” Japan has been a major bilateral trade and official development partner, consistent in its commitment to uphold the same values aligned with our economic and developmental priorities,” he added. Besides his face-to-face with Sanae, the chief executive, with first lady Liza Araneta-Marcos, will have an audience with Japan’s Emperor and Empress at the Imperial Palace for a welcome ceremony and a state call. Marcos’ first order of business upon arriving in Tokyo was a meeting with the Filipino community there. In his absence, the chief executive has designated Executive Secretary Ralph Recto, Education Secretary Juan Edgardo Angara and Agrarian Reform chief Conrado Estrella III as administrative caretakers.

- PhilHealth and IBP team up to provide free legal aid for indigent members (2026-05-26 16:07)

THE Philippine Health Insurance Corp. (PhilHealth) and the Integrated Bar of the Philippines (IBP) signed a memorandum of agreement (MOA) to provide free legal support for qualified PhilHealth members, particularly the indigents. PhilHealth President and CEO Edwin Mercado and IBP National President and Chairman of the 27th Board of Governors Allan Panolong led other key officials during Tuesday’s MOA signing held at the IBP building in Pasig City. Mercado and Panolong said that the partnership between PhilHealth and IBP would strengthen PhilHealth members’ protection, promote patients’ rights and expand access to legal support for Filipinos under the Universal Health Care (UHC) program. Hailing IBP’s initiative to collaborate with the agency, Mercado said that the key feature of the agreement was the provision of free legal aid, especially for poor PhilHealth members on matters related to health care benefits and claims. “PhilHealth will support these initiatives by providing the necessary information and documentation to facilitate the legal assistance,” Mercado said. PhilHealth and the country's national organization of lawyers vowed to work hand-in-hand to "promote greater awareness of members' rights and entitlements under UHC through joint information and education campaigns." "The two institutions will also collaborate on policy initiatives that seek to enhance patient welfare and improve the delivery of health care services," Mercado said. Panolong said the agreement would also cover collaboration in health law and policy development for PhilHealth lawyers as well as fraud prevention efforts. These initiatives are expected to strengthen PhilHealth's ability to deliver responsive services and ensure that members receive the benefits and protection they are entitled to under the law, the IBP chief said. "We are not just here to sign an agreement or a document. We are here to re-appear a shared national commitment. That access to health and access to justice must go together," he pointed out. With the partnership, Mercado stressed that the agency's existing dispute mechanisms would be enhanced, further improving service delivery and ensuring that member concerns and benefit-related issues are addressed in "a timely, fair and efficient manner." "Through this agreement, we can ensure that every Filipino would not only have access to health insurance coverage but would also be equipped with the information, support and legal safeguards needed to fully enjoy their health care rights," he added.

- US launches new attacks on Iran despite ceasefire (2026-05-26 16:06)

US forces attacked missile sites in southern Iran and boats trying to lay mines on Monday, US Central Command said, imperiling a fragile ceasefire and casting new doubt on a deal to end the Middle East war. The strikes came as top Iranian negotiators arrived in Doha for the latest round of talks to end the months-long conflict, and as the Israeli military stepped up hostilities with Iran-backed Hezbollah in southern Lebanon. Oil prices fluctuated in the wake of the US strikes, which may threaten any agreement to reopen the Strait of Hormuz, where an Iranian blockade has throttled global fuel supplies. "US forces conducted self-defense strikes in southern Iran today to protect our troops from threats posed by Iranian forces," Tim Hawkins, a Central Command spokesman, said in a statement. It gave no details of the attacks and said only that the targets included missile launch sites and boats trying to lay mines. Despite the strikes, Secretary of State Marco Rubio said Tuesday a deal remained within reach but struck a firm note on the Hormuz strait. "There were some talks going on in Qatar today, so we'll see if we can make progress. I think it's a lot of talking back and forth going on about specific language in the initial document, so it'll take a few days," Rubio told reporters during a visit to India, without commenting about the impact of the strikes. He said the strait was "going to be open one way or the other," adding: "What's happening there is unlawful, it's illegal, it's unsustainable for the world, it's unacceptable." Iran's state-run broadcaster IRIB reported several loud explosions were heard in the vicinity of Bandar Abbas at around midnight local time (2030 GMT Monday). It added the situation in the southern port city was normal and local authorities were investigating the cause of the blasts. The strikes threatened a ceasefire that began April 8 as the United States and Iran struggle to reach an accord to end a war that has rattled the global economy with a severe disruption of energy flows. Oil prices fluctuated on Tuesday morning but remained below $100, with West Texas Intermediate dropping more than

5 percent while international benchmark Brent crude was up. Hopes of an accord took another blow when Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu vowed to “crush” Hezbollah in Lebanon. Iran has demanded that any peace accord apply to the fighting in Lebanon as well. Nuclear fuel disposal Trump also said in a social media post he expected Iran to hand over its enriched uranium to the United States to be destroyed, or have it destroyed in Iran with an international witness. The nuclear fuel “will either be immediately turned over to the United States to be brought home and destroyed or, preferably, in conjunction and coordination with the Islamic Republic of Iran, destroyed in place or, at another acceptable location, with the Atomic Energy Commission, or its equivalent, being witness to this process and event,” Trump wrote. It was not clear whether he meant this would be part of a potential accord with Iran, and the commission he cited was abolished in 1974. Earlier Monday, Trump said it should be mandatory for Saudi Arabia, the United Arab Emirates, Qatar, Pakistan, Egypt, Turkey, Bahrain and Jordan to join the Abraham Accords, a set of agreements brokered in 2020 with nations historically hostile to Israel, as part of a peace deal with Iran. Trump said he had spoken to the leaders of those countries Saturday about efforts to end the war. Bahrain and the UAE have already signed the accords, along with Morocco and Sudan. While the Abraham Accords were welcomed by some, they remain deeply unpopular in many parts of the Middle East — in part because they fail to address the Israeli-Palestinian conflict. Gulf states such as Saudi Arabia and Qatar have said normalization with Israel depends on the creation of a Palestinian state. No imminent deal Anna Jacobs of the Arab Gulf States Institute in Washington said Gulf nations were unlikely to accept Trump’s demand. “The national security of the Gulf states has been threatened more than ever before because of President Trump’s reckless decisions, and he expects Arab states to thank him and to normalize relations with Israel, which they will not do at this stage,” she said. Before the strikes on Iran, Rubio had suggested a deal could be reached by the end of Monday. Iran’s foreign ministry spokesman Esmaeil Baqaei said both sides had “reached a conclusion on a large portion of the issues” but that it did not mean an agreement was imminent. Netanyahu said Monday he had ordered an “even greater acceleration” of the Israeli offensive in Lebanon following Hezbollah drone attacks on Israeli forces. He said any final deal with Iran “must eliminate the nuclear threat entirely,” a position echoed by Washington. Iranian officials have stressed that, despite the longstanding US demand for an end to its uranium enrichment, talks on its nuclear program have been deferred until after an initial agreement. Pinoy seafarers The Department of Migrant Workers (DMW) on Monday reported that 1,834 Filipino seafarers in 59 different vessels crossed the Strait of Hormuz over the past month. In a statement, the DMW said they continued to monitor vessels crossing the strait, amid the ongoing war in the Middle East. Among those that crossed the strait were oil tankers, cargo ships, container vessels, and other commercial vessels operating within the region. “As part of its intensified monitoring efforts, the department is also closely tracking 17 more vessels that may attempt to cross the Strait of Hormuz on May 25, 2026, carrying nearly 300 Filipino seafarers onboard,” the DMW said. “In the meantime, the DMW’s coordination with shipping companies, licensed manning agencies, and relevant government agencies continues to ensure real-time updates, ongoing communication, and immediate response when necessary,” it added. The DMW assured the public that assistance and support services are readily available for Filipino seafarers who are affected by the ongoing war, as well as their families. “At the same time, continuous monitoring is undertaken to safeguard the welfare, safety, and security of all overseas Filipino maritime workers,” the agency said.

- Stable HPV vaccine supply, procurement pushed (2026-05-26 16:05)

HEALTH leaders have urged the Department of Health (DOH) to ensure a sufficient supply of essential vaccines, particularly against the human papillomavirus (HPV). The call was made during the observance of Cervical Cancer Awareness Month. Dr. Concepcion Rayel, president of the Philippine Obstetrical and Gynecological Society, emphasized the critical role of HPV vaccination in preventing cervical cancer. “We need the help of the Department of Health to provide us with supplies,” Rayel said at a media forum in Makati on Tuesday. She noted that while the country has made strides in awareness campaigns and screening programs, the lack of consistent vaccine supplies remains a significant barrier. Rayel said cervical cancer remains one of the most preventable yet deadly diseases affecting women globally, claiming the lives of 12 women daily. The cost of cervical cancer continues to burden women, especially in economically disadvantaged and remote areas. Carmen Auste, president of the Cancer Warriors Foundation, said women struggle to access screening and vaccination services due to financial and logistical barriers. “For women in low-resource communities, free screening programs are not truly free. Transportation costs, lost income, and the need for multiple visits make it difficult for them to access care,” Auste said. “The manner in which a country treats its women reveals its very soul,” she added. Health experts cited the need to reduce stigma and misinformation surrounding HPV vaccination, which often deters families from seeking preventive care. They said collective action is needed for stronger partnerships between government agencies, health care providers, private organizations, and civil society to strengthen awareness on the health issue. “Eliminating cervical cancer is not just a medical goal; it is a societal responsibility. We have the tools, the knowledge, and the manpower. What we need now is leadership, a clear roadmap, and the logistics to make it happen,” Rayel said. Naga City Mayor Leni Robredo and Senate President Alan Peter Cayetano made similar calls to the DOH earlier. The Manila Times sought comment from the DOH, but it has yet to issue a response.

- Malabon City University earns institutional recognition, expands education opportunities (2026-05-26 16:04)

MALABON CITY Mayor Jeannie Sandoval on Tuesday promised to expand educational opportunities for students after the Institutional Recognition (IR) by the Commission on Higher Education (CHED) for the City of Malabon University (CMU). “It was a landmark achievement of the university, 33 years in the making. Education remains the local government’s single greatest investment for the future of Malabon,” Sandoval said. According to CHED, IR “is the official government seal certifying that a college or a university meets the minimum standards the commission sets for operations, faculty, facilities, and curriculum.” Also, the recognition is expected to strengthen the credibility of CMU diplomas and unlock vital access to national government scholarships, student financial assistance programs, and institutional development grants, according to the local government. Sandoval acknowledged the steep challenges CMU previously faced, including losing its eligibility for Unifast (Unified Student Financial Assistance System for Tertiary Education) and free higher education benefits for Academic Year 2022–2023 due to compliance and institutional shortcomings, which happened even before she assumed the city's top post. The mayor noted that she deeply understood how heavy this burden was for local families, recognizing that for many, Unifast is not just a simple subsidy, but the sole reason their children can step into a college classroom. "But I also want to remind our fellow Malabueños that while we are processing all compliance requirements to restore CMU's eligibility with Unifast from 2023 to the present, we have not neglected the education of our city youth," she stressed. Despite those inherited setbacks, the city government aggressively intervened, allocating more than P150 million annually from local funds to sustain CMU's daily operations and guarantee that no student's education would be interrupted, City Administrator Alex Rosete told The Manila Times. To bridge the gap permanently, Rosete said the city government is working extensively to overhaul CMU's governance systems, elevate program certifications, streamline documentation, and meet the rigid quality assurance standards demanded by CHED. The top city officials thanked the university administration, faculty members, parents, students, and city officials whose collaborative efforts made the historic breakthrough possible. "This is not just recognition for a single school. It is recognition of the hard work of our teachers, the sacrifices of our parents, the determination of our students, and the commitment of the entire city to raise the quality of education in Malabon. Most of all, it is an investment in the future of every Malabueño child," Sandoval said.

- Comelec gears up for 71M voters (2026-05-26 16:03)

THE number of registered voters has climbed to around 71 million ahead of the Barangay and Sangguniang Kabataan Elections (BSKE) scheduled in November this year, the Commission on Elections (Comelec) said on Tuesday. Comelec Chairman George Erwin Garcia said the number is significantly higher than the 68 million voters recorded during the 2025 national and local elections. Garcia said that the number of registered SK voters surged to around 25 million. He said around 5.6 million registered from Oct. 20, 2025 to May 18, 2026. According to Garcia, the increase reflects strong public participation and heightened voter interest ahead of the BSKE scheduled on Nov. 2. The Comelec has intensified preparations for the nationwide polls, including precinct planning, validation of voter lists and coordination with local government units to ensure orderly and credible elections. Those who can vote for the SK are 15 to 30 years old. Garcia said that voter registration may resume in February 2027 after the conduct of the synchronized barangay and youth council polls. The November 2026 elections will determine the next set of barangay officials and youth leaders who will serve communities across the country for the next term.

- Labor groups urge new DOLE secretary Tolentino to prioritize wage hikes and job security (2026-05-26 16:02)

MAJOR labor groups on Tuesday urged new Labor Secretary Francis Tolentino to act immediately on long-standing worker demands, including higher wages, job security, and stronger labor rights protections. The Trade Union Congress of the Philippines (TUCP) and the Federation of Free Workers (FFW) both welcomed Tolentino's appointment, expecting a responsive, action-driven leadership at the Department of Labor and Employment (DOLE). TUCP said Filipino workers viewed Tolentino's appointment with "cautious optimism," hoping it would lead to concrete reforms that would improve workers' lives. It called on Tolentino to "hit the ground running," stressing that only two years remain under the administration of Ferdinand Marcos Jr. to address worsening labor conditions. TUCP pressed for urgent income support for minimum wage earners, tighter regulations against contractualization or "ENDO," and stronger protection of workers' freedom of association. It added that millions of Filipino workers continue to struggle with poverty wages, high inflation, and declining purchasing power amid rising living costs nationwide. Estimates show that in the private sector, more than 23 million workers are employed on a contractual basis, including "endo," "555" or those supplied by manpower agencies and cooperatives. ENDO is short for "end-of-contract," or "5-5-5," because contracts usually span five months at a time. After five months, employers rehire employees for another fixed term, and the cycle continues. The 1987 Constitution guarantees the right to security of tenure, and Article 296 of the Philippine Labor Code states that employees who continue to work after a six-month probationary period must be regularized and, as such, given labor standards benefits, such as SSS, paid leaves, 13th month, and security of tenure. The provision was meant to protect workers, but companies learned to circumvent it to save money, usually by outsourcing contract workers from an agency or manpower cooperative. Also, the TUCP cited the Philippines' continued inclusion among the world's worst countries for workers, according to the International Trade Union Confederation Global Rights Index. It noted that Tolentino previously recognized the need for a "decent living daily wage" for Filipinos to rise above the poverty threshold. As chairman of the National Wages and Productivity Commission (NWPC), Tolentino was urged to confront the widening gap between wages and the cost of living, beginning with at least a P200 increase in the minimum wage. Meanwhile, the FFW expressed sorrow over outgoing Labor Secretary Bienvenido Laguesma's resignation due to health reasons. The group thanked Laguesma for his years of service and credited him for promoting dialogue, consultations and tripartite discussions that strengthened labor relations. While welcoming Tolentino, FFW said that labor governance requires a deep understanding of workers' realities, especially amid challenges such as inflation, contractualization, digital platform work, artificial intelligence disruptions, and job insecurity. The federation said it expects Tolentino to bring fresh energy and commitment to DOLE, emphasizing that industrial peace and social justice depend on strong cooperation among labor, employers and government. Both labor groups underscored that the transition in DOLE leadership should strengthen, not weaken, workers' voice in governance and ensure that labor concerns remain a national priority.

- Paris school aide tried for alleged sexual assault of preschoolers (2026-05-26 15:26)

PARIS — A French school aide went on trial in Paris on Tuesday accused of sexually assaulting kindergarten pupils, in the first such public hearing since a flurry of allegations of abuse rocked the capital. Parents in the city have in recent months accused supervisors in charge of children outside the classroom -- such as during recess or before pick-up -- of mistreating or physically or sexually abusing pupils in their care. The French capital's new mayor, Emmanuel Gregoire, a Socialist who says he suffered sexual abuse himself during an after-school swimming programme in primary, has announced dozens of suspensions and pledged to stamp out such violence. David G., a 36-year-old freelance journalist who worked in a kindergarten to help make ends meet, has been charged with sexual assault of five preschoolers aged three to five and sexual harassment of two female colleagues between September 2024 and April 2025. The defendant, who has denied the charges, arrived in a packed court on Tuesday afternoon, shielding his face from photographers by holding up a yellow document file. Four other families have also accused him of sexually abusing their children in cases not reviewed by the prosecutor's office, but that will be referred to in court. Dozens of activists protested outside before the trial started. "We're hoping for a real conviction, a harsh one, because there are so few when it comes to sexual assaults on children," said Anne, who did not give her surname and said her son goes to the same school in Paris' 11th district. - Allegations at 84 kindergartens - The mayor's office said the defendant had been suspended immediately in April last year after parents complained and the principal alerted the authorities. Police gathered statements from very young children describing, in their own words, how the defendant touched their private parts. The accused, who risks 10 years in jail and a fine of 150,000 euros ($175,000), denies the accusations. But he admitted to breaking the guidelines, including that an adult looking after pupils should not have a child sit on their lap. His lawyer did not respond to an AFP request for comment. The same court is next month to issue a verdict in a separate case judged behind closed doors, in which prosecutors demanded a suspended 18-month sentence for a 47-year-old man for sexually harassing nine schoolgirls then aged 10, and assaulting three of them. He was suspended in 2024. Three other such trials involving accusations against non-teaching school helpers in Paris are expected before early September. Paris investigators are looking into allegations non-teaching staff recruited by the city mistreated or abused children at 84 kindergartens and around 20 primary schools, the Paris prosecutor said earlier this month. In the first three months of 2026, Paris suspended 78 aides, including 31 suspected of sexual abuse, the mayor has said. An estimated 160,000 children suffer rape or sexual assault each year in France, according to an independent commission called CIIVISE. The abuser is a family member in eight out of 10 cases.

- Iran accuses US of violating ceasefire over past 48 hours (2026-05-26 15:13)

TEHRAN — Iran's foreign ministry on Tuesday accused the United States of violating a fragile ceasefire during the past 48 hours in the southern coastal province of Hormozgan, without specifying the incident. The accusation comes after US Central Command said its forces had on Monday attacked missile sites and boats in southern Iran that were trying to lay mines in the Gulf, while Iran's Revolutionary Guards said it fired at US aircraft trying to enter its airspace."The US terrorist army, continuing its illegal and unjustified actions since the ceasefire... has, in the past 48 hours, committed a gross violation of the ceasefire in the Hormozgan region," the Iranian foreign ministry said in a statement. It added that Tehran "will not leave any evil unanswered and will not hesitate to defend the Iranian nation," without elaborating. Tuesday's statement came as a top Iranian delegation was in Qatar for talks as part of a "diplomatic process" aimed at ending the war with the United States, which broke out on February 28.

- Video games turn to classic films to woo middle-aged millennials (2026-05-26 14:57)

PARIS, France — Millennial gamers who grew up on 80s and 90s blockbusters are today being courted by the industry, with the latest James Bond offering hard on the heels of an Indiana Jones adventure and soon to be followed by "Jurassic Park". "I've worked on a lot of different projects, but always had an eye to Bond," Rasmus Poulsen, art director for "007 First Light", set for release on Wednesday, told AFP ahead of the game's publication. The Dane, in his 40s, also runs a YouTube channel showing off 3D models of spacecraft from the Star Wars and Star Trek universes -- underscoring his part in a generation of game developers now turning their hands to adapting the worlds they fantasised about as kids. With his firearms, high-tech gadgets, luxury cars and over-the-top flirting, "James Bond is a perfect fit for video games, because he's a character built around the imperative to act," said Alexis Blanchet, a cinema and media lecturer at Paris' Sorbonne-Nouvelle University. The British agent had not appeared in a game title for more than a decade before "First Light" -- with follow-ups to 1997 Nintendo 64 mega-hit "Goldeneye" leaving most players neither shaken nor stirred. "First Light" is also the first game with the Bond franchise under the stewardship of Amazon, which bought studio MGM in 2022. - Modern reboot - Built by "Hitman" developers IO Interactive, "First Light" offers a new version of Bond's origin story, dropping players into the shoes of a cocky but callow young version of the spy still earning his stripes. "It makes sense that Amazon's first dip into 007 mythology should be with a game," games and culture journalist Keith Stuart of British paper The Guardian argued in a newsletter this month. "In the cinema, Bond's legacy as a character has become problematic and his motivations as a modern British secret agent uncertain," he added. Video game adaptations of films date back as far as the late 1970s. But they had their moment in the sun from the mid-1980s, with games often released alongside blockbusters' appearance in cinemas. Frequently of questionable quality, the tie-in games felt to many players like a cash grab profiting from the movies' marketing campaigns. By the 2000s, some franchises offered games that fleshed out or complemented the worlds depicted on the silver screen. But data provided by Blanchet shows the genre rapidly tailing off in the early 2010s. - Ageing gamers - Between 1975 and 2011, just 547 films inspired around 2,000 games -- 10 percent of the total published over the period, he estimated. Blanchet argued that today's resurgence in beloved pop-culture sagas is part of the "routine functioning" of the industry, rather than representing any kind of "renewal". "The average age of video game players has been getting older, and studios know it," he said. To stand out, publishers "try to guarantee their game will succeed" by including characters known and loved by large audiences. The pressure is all the greater given the doldrums the whole games industry has been traversing for more than two years, Blanchet noted. Successes like "Indiana Jones and the Great Circle" or "Hogwarts Legacy" have been matched by more mixed receptions, such as for "Star Wars Outlaws" from Ubisoft. That chance of success means audiences are likely to see still more adaptations in the coming years. "Modern video games are able to sidestep the complexities of, let's say, compromised cinematic franchises, giving fans the bits of the experience they want without the detritus of dodgy story arcs and straitjacketed mythologies," journalist Stuart wrote.

- ICC sets wide-ranging agenda for Duterte status conference; to discuss trial date (2026-05-26 12:11)

MANILA, Philippines — The International Criminal Court's (ICC) Trial Chamber III has issued a detailed agenda for the first status conference in the case against former president Rodrigo Duterte, scheduling discussions on the trial start date and evidence disclosure, witness protection and victims' participation. In an order made public on Tuesday, the chamber laid out a list of items to be addressed at the May 27 status conference, signaling the complexity of pre-trial preparations in the high-profile case. Based on the order, judges will first take up the proposed commencement date of the trial and all deadlines leading up to trial, including filings, disclosures, and pre-trial motions. The chamber will then hear relevant updates from the prosecution on the estimated volume of witnesses, documentary evidence, and other non-testimonial evidence it intends to rely upon at trial. The use of expert witnesses will be discussed, along with the potential for witness testimony via audio-visual link. Judges will also consider the application of Rule 68 of the ICC Rules of Procedure and Evidence, which allows for the introduction of previously recorded testimony under specific conditions, a provision that could significantly shape how evidence is presented. The parties will address agreed facts under Rule 69, a mechanism that can streamline trial proceedings by having both sides acknowledge certain uncontested points. The chamber will also discuss languages to be used by the parties, participants, and witnesses, as well as interpretation and translation needs – a logistical challenge given the international nature of the court and the expected involvement of Filipino witnesses and evidence. Also to be tackled are protocols that will govern courtroom operations: a witness preparation protocol, a witness familiarization protocol, rules for handling dual-status individuals (such as victims who are also witnesses), and a protocol addressing vulnerability issues. Judges will also discuss the application of other protocols adopted during the pre-trial phase. While the status conference will be public, the chamber may order private sessions to avoid disclosing sensitive information regarding witness protection and security issues. The order noted that other issues raised in written submissions, though not on this first agenda, may be discussed in upcoming status conferences leading to the start of trial.

- Govt prepares interventions to cushion impact of El Niño (2026-05-26 12:08)

MANILA, Philippines — Malacañang on Tuesday assured the public of the government's readiness to mitigate the impact of El Niño, which may develop as early as June and persist until early 2027. President Ferdinand Marcos Jr. convened concerned agencies in Malacañang on Monday to assess the situation and identify interventions to cushion the effects of the weather phenomenon. In a chance interview in Pasay City, Executive Secretary Ralph Recto said preparations are underway to reduce the impact of El Niño on affected sectors. "We are already studying the government's response to El Niño," Recto said. He said the government is reviewing previous interventions to determine which measures effectively mitigated the effects of El Niño. The Philippine Atmospheric, Geophysical and Astronomical Services Administration (Pagasa) earlier warned of a 79 percent chance that El Niño would emerge during the June-July-August season. The latest El Niño episode, which lasted from July 2023 to June 2024, adversely affected the country's agriculture sector. Pagasa said drier-than-normal conditions may occur in areas vulnerable to dry spells and droughts.

- Love confession, flying kiss ease Senate tension (2026-05-26 09:27)

MANILA, Philippines — A lighthearted exchange briefly eased tensions in the Senate on Tuesday after Senators Pia Cayetano and Lito Lapid expressed their appreciation for each other during the plenary session, as the chamber remained divided following recent leadership changes. The session opened with a manifestation from Cayetano, who thanked Lapid for calling on senators to unite and avoid further conflicts. Lapid, who rarely speaks during plenary proceedings, made an emotional appeal to his colleagues to preserve unity and restore the dignity of the institution amid political tensions that have persisted since the May 11, 2026 leadership change. He also urged guests attending the session to pray for the senators as they worked through internal disagreements. At the same time, Lapid denied rumors that he was planning to leave the minority bloc to join the majority. "I will never leave the minority," Lapid said, putting to rest speculation surrounding his political alignment. Cayetano, meanwhile, expressed appreciation for Lapid's friendship despite belonging to different political groups. She cited the senator's monthly gifts of homemade delicacies such as maja blanca (pudding) and suman (rice cakes). The exchange drew laughter from senators and guests after Lapid responded in Filipino by saying he wanted Cayetano to know that he loved her, drawing cheers inside the session hall. Cayetano responded with a playful "flying kiss."

- Ombudsman may file plunder raps vs Villanueva soon (2026-05-26 08:56)

MANILA, Philippines — Ombudsman Jesus Crispin Remulla said on Tuesday that his office may soon file a plunder case against Sen. Joel Villanueva who has been linked to the flood control mess. Villanueva called the allegation "ridiculous." "Of course, it is not just Senator Jinggoy. We are finishing another one and we can file it really soon, the one against Senator Joel Villanueva.

That is another one that is ripe but we need to thoroughly refine how all the information and evidence included are laid out", Ombudsman Jesus Crispin Remulla said in Filipino and English at a press briefing on Tuesday. Remulla said in the same briefing that his office will file a flood control-related plunder case before the Sandiganbayan against Sen. Jinggoy Estrada.

- Court issues hold departure order vs Marcoleta, Defensor, 2 others (2026-05-26 08:45)

MANILA, Philippines — The Sandiganbayan Seventh Division on Tuesday issued a Precautionary Hold Departure Order (PHDO) against Sen. Rodante Marcoleta, former lawmaker Michael Defensor, Aristotle Viray, and Joseph Espiritu. Earlier on Tuesday, the court conducted a hearing on the Verified Ex Parte Application For the Issuance of a Precautionary Hold Departure Order. "Respondents pose a clear and substantial flight risk," the application filed by the Office of the Ombudsman on Monday read. "Undoubtedly, respondents are aware of possible criminal charges against them that could result in restraint of liberty and imposition of substantial fines. This provides a compelling motive to evade this jurisdiction before the criminal process can fully take hold", it read. Field investigators filed a complaint before the Office of the Ombudsman against the four individuals last May 18, alleging that "Marcoleta's acceptance of gifts with an aggregate amount of PhP75 Million on three separate occasions constitute the crime of Plunder". Aside from wanting the Ombudsman's office to file a plunder case in court against Marcoleta, Defensor, Espiritu, and Viray, the investigators wanted the same office to file three indirect bribery cases against the senator. Marcoleta, Defensor, Espiritu, and Viray "should also be charged for violation of Presidential Decree (PD) No. 46," the investigators said. PD 46, the investigators said, "made it punishable for any public official or employee, whether of the national or local governments, to receive, directly or indirectly, and for private persons to give, or offer to give, any gift, present or other valuable thing on any occasion, including Christmas, when such gift, present, or other valuable thing is given by reason of his official position, regardless of whether or not the same is for past favor or favors or the giver hopes or expects to receive a favor or better treatment in the future from the public official or employee concerned in the discharge of his official functions." The application said that the respondents' "involvement" suggested "access to significant financial resources" and that "a person with access to substantial...financial resources possesses a far greater capacity to abruptly leave the country, sustain himself abroad and evade prosecution for an extended period." In an Order dated May 21, 2026, the Office of the Ombudsman gave the respondents 15 days from receipt of its order to file counter-affidavits. Marcoleta said in a post on Facebook that the complaint was "without evidence of public injury, official favor, corrupt consideration, or abuse of office". "There was no illegal act, no corrupt transaction, no favor sought, and absolutely no conspiracy to commit any crime," Defensor said.

MANILA, Philippines — President Ferdinand Marcos Jr. brushed off claims he is pushing the “no election” scenario to extend his stay in office. It was his sister, Sen. Imee Marcos, who claimed that the president and his allies are pushing to amend the constitution to let him stay in power. The President left for a four-day state visit to Japan on Tuesday. “It forms part of a broader foreign policy agenda to forge closer political ties, stronger defense and security cooperation, and more enduring economic partnership with major countries in the region in order to advance the interest of the Filipino people in promoting regional peace, prosperity and stability,” Marcos said during the send-off ceremony held at the Villamor Airbase in Pasay City. The president is scheduled to meet with Prime Minister Sanae Takaichi.

- Cable thief caught in the act through live MMDA Cameras (2026-05-26 02:56)

MANILA, Philippines — A man accused of stealing electrical cables inside the Ayala Tunnel along EDSA in Makati City was arrested minutes after Metropolitan Manila Development Authority (MMDA) personnel spotted the incident through live CCTV monitoring. The MMDA said Tuesday that CCTV operators monitoring the tunnel saw the suspect pulling hanging cables and cutting them into pieces at around 10:35 p.m. on Friday. The agency’s Metrobase unit immediately alerted the Southern Police District-Makati Police Station, triggering a rapid response operation inside the tunnel area. Police arrested the suspect at around 10:48 p.m. while he was attempting to leave the Ayala Tunnel carrying a backpack, according to the MMDA. A video released by the agency showed the suspect allegedly dragging the cables inside the tunnel before authorities intercepted him. The suspect is now under the custody of Makati police and was subjected to inquest proceedings before the Office of the City Prosecutor in Makati. The incident also underscored the use of the MMDA’s live tunnel surveillance system not only for traffic management but also for detecting crimes and coordinating immediate police response along major Metro Manila roads. The MMDA urged the public to report suspicious activities and road-related incidents through its 136 hotline.

- DOJ subpoenas key govt institutions in expanded probe of ICC warrant on dela Rosa (2026-05-26 02:53)

MANILA, Philippines — The Department of Justice (DOJ) has issued a series of subpoenas to key government institutions as part of its expanding investigation tied to the enforcement of the International Criminal Court (ICC) arrest warrant against Sen. Ronald dela Rosa and alleged obstruction of justice surrounding his reported movements. Justice Secretary Frederick Vida said in a media briefing on Tuesday that the special panel of prosecutors has ordered the production of documents from the Senate, the Commission on Audit (COA), and the Philippine National Police–Firearms and Explosives Office (PNP-FEO), as part of efforts to establish a complete factual record relevant to the case. At the center of the subpoenas is the Office of the Senate Secretary, which was directed to submit internal records, including security entry and exit logs, as well as documents from the Office of the Senate Sergeant-at-Arms covering personnel deployment and security procedures. The DOJ also requested a complete inventory of firearms owned by the Senate, along with issuance records identifying officials or employees authorized to possess or access specific weapons. Authorities said the request included verification of a firearm allegedly seen in video footage, described as a “Scorpion” type weapon. Vida said the security logs were essential in reconstructing movements within the Senate premises during the period under investigation, noting that entry and exit records are routinely time-stamped and could help establish a clear timeline. “Every entry and exit is recorded. We are validating those records as part of the investigation,” he said. The COA was also subpoenaed to submit audit and inventory reports related to Senate assets, particularly firearms and other regulated equipment under government custody. In a parallel directive, the PNP–Firearms and Explosives Office was ordered to produce records on firearms registered under the Senate, including ownership and licensing data, to verify accountability and trace weapon issuance. Vida said the coordinated subpoenas form part of a broader fact-finding effort linked to the ICC warrant enforcement and the ongoing determination of possible obstruction of justice. He stressed that the probe was not limited to locating dela Rosa but also covered whether individuals or institutions may have helped conceal persons of interest, tamper with evidence, or delay law enforcement actions. The DOJ said the ICC warrant against dela Rosa remained valid and enforceable in the Philippines, with operational efforts to locate him continuing. Vida declined to confirm details on an Interpol red notice application, saying such matters remained within operational channels, but said enforcement mechanisms were actively being pursued. The justice chief added that the panel of prosecutors would assess all relevant admissions and factual circumstances to determine possible liability of other individuals who may have assisted or facilitated movements linked to the senator. He said the subpoenas were intended to ground the investigation on documentary evidence as agencies begin submitting the required records to the DOJ panel.

- Zubiri apologizes to Inday Badiday's family for dragging name during heated Senate plenary discussions (2026-05-26 02:31)

MANILA, Philippines — Sen. Miguel Zubiri apologized to the family of late talk show host Inday Badiday for mentioning her name when he motioned to strike off the record a video presented by fellow Sen. Imee Marcos linking the minority bloc to Charter change (Cha-cha). The senator issued the apology Monday night after Badiday's grandson IC Mendoza called him out for dragging her late grandmother to the issue. The 11-member minority bloc, where Zubiri belonged, denied Marcos' insinuation and stood one by one to support Zubiri's motion. During his manifestation Monday afternoon to strike out the "horrible propaganda video" contained in Marcos' privilege speech, Zubiri said, "Inday Badiday na ba tayo dito sa Senado (Have we become Inday Badiday here at the Senate)?" Badiday used to host a television program which contained a segment on showbiz scandals or rumors, earning her the moniker "queen of intrigues." "[That's] Slip of the tongue po iyon in the middle of a heated debate, and I take full responsibility because I should have been more careful with my words," Zubiri wrote on Facebook. He said Mendoza was right that his grandmother should not have been dragged in political matters. "Again, I apologize deeply to the family and I will be more mindful moving forward." "I want to say this from the heart: I respect Inday Badiday, and like many from my generation, I grew up seeing her on TV. She was part of our pop culture and she was loved by so many Filipinos," he said in English and Filipino. Zubiri said Badiday was really lovable "with her own charm, wit and warmth, and I fully recognize her contribution to Philippine television, entertainment journalism and media." "My frustration was about the video shown on the Senate floor, and I never meant to disrespect her memory or reduce her legacy to politics," he added. Sen. Panfilo Lacson, on X, wrote, "In showbiz, during her prime, Maria Lourdes Jimenez-Carvajal, more popularly known as 'Inday Badiday' was a decent person. She was authentic and truthful, trusted and credible." Without mentioning any name, Lacson said that in the Senate plenary on Monday someone presented a "fake source, fake messenger; and fake back-up."

- How some SC justices voted on dela Rosa petition against ICC arrest warrant and why (2026-05-26 00:58)

MANILA, Philippines — As the government tightened its noose on fugitive Sen. Ronald dela Rosa, members of the Supreme Court, which paved the way for his arrest by the International Criminal Court (ICC) by thumbing down his petition to stop the enforcement of the warrant explain their positions. Voting 9-5-1 during a special en banc session on May 20, 2026, the Court denied dela Rosa's application for a temporary restraining order (TRO) or status quo ante order that sought to bar government agencies from arresting him on the basis of any ICC warrant, Interpol Red Notice, or foreign judicial process without a Philippine-issued warrant. The full decision, including the concurring and dissenting opinions, was released to the public on Monday. Here are some of the justices' opinions and why: Associate Justice Alfredo Benjamin Caguioa In his concurring opinion, Caguioa said the Court "should not come to the rescue of an individual, a public officer no less, who is charged with mass murder, and who is being brought before the ICC to face the consequences of his actions that flouted the rule of law with impunity." Caguioa said dela Rosa's plea for immediate judicial intervention must be viewed in light of the "recent history of impunity" that drove victims of the anti-drug campaign to seek relief before an international tribunal. "To invoke due process in order to prolong historical injustices is a severe insult to the deceased and trivializes the immense agony of the families left behind," he wrote. On the issue of whether an ICC arrest warrant requires validation by a Philippine court, Caguioa argued that "there is no need for a separate warrant from a Philippine judge in order to effectuate an arrest for cases cognizable by the ICC," citing Article 59(4) of the Rome Statute. He said probable cause determinations for ICC cases fall exclusively under ICC judges because such offenses were not cognizable before Philippine courts. Senior Associate Justice Marvic Leonen In a separate concurrence, Leonen emphasized that courts generally did not restrain criminal prosecutions through injunctions or prohibition. He added that legal remedies remained available even after an arrest, and that provisional judicial relief could not be used to preempt law enforcement action at that stage. Associate Justice Maria Filomena Singh, meanwhile, pointed to dela Rosa's conduct and invoked the equitable doctrine of "clean hands." Singh noted that the senator allegedly went into hiding for months, resurfaced only to participate in the Senate leadership election, and later disappeared again. "The present record weighs heavily against the grant of provisional relief," Singh wrote. "Senator dela Rosa's actions... show that his conduct has been tainted with bad faith." "This conduct shows that Senator dela Rosa only engaged with the legal processes based on his convenience, and reflects inequitable conduct which should bar the grant of the relief he seeks," she added.

The five dissenting justices — Ramon Paul Hernando, Amy Lazaro-Javier, Henri Jean Paul Inting, Ricardo Rosario, and Antonio Kho Jr. — argued that dela Rosa satisfied the requirements for injunctive relief and faced the risk of irreversible harm if arrested and transferred to The Hague.

In his four-page dissent, Hernando said there was "no domestic judicial process authorizing the arrest or surrender" of dela Rosa to the ICC and maintained that the tribunal lacked jurisdiction over the case. He warned there was "zero guarantee" that dela Rosa would not be immediately surrendered once arrested. "Indeed, the injury cannot be repaired after the fact by any subsequent ruling. Hence, the necessity of an injunctive relief," Hernando wrote.

Hernando also questioned Section 17 of Republic Act 9851, saying cooperation with international tribunals "must still operate within constitutional limits." "Cooperation with international tribunals must still be exercised in a manner that does not contravene the Bill of Rights and the statutory protections that implement them," he said.

In her nine-page dissent, Javier said the issue required "a disciplined legal inquiry and not a referendum on personality, political identity, or public sentiment." She argued that the circumstances "not only justify but necessitate the issuance of temporary injunctive relief." "The rights at stake are neither speculative nor abstract. The potential injury is not merely political or reputational; it is juridical, concrete, and irreparable," Lazaro-Javier wrote. "To deny provisional relief under these conditions is to expose petitioner to harm that the law itself recognizes as intolerable," she added.

• Southwesterly wind flow signals rainy season's approach —Pagasa (2026-05-25 23:37)

MANILA, Philippines – The onset of the southwest monsoon or 'habagat' associated with rains would be likely sooner following the emergence of the southwesterly wind flow, the state-run weather agency said on Tuesday.

Nathaniel Servando, Philippine Atmospheric Geophysical and Astronomical Services Administration (Pagasa) chief, said this weather system – which brings warm, moist air from the southwest across the country – has already been affecting the Zamboanga Peninsula, Lanao del Norte, Misamis Occidental, and Palawan.

Pagasa said its presence usually indicates the onset of the rainy season, mainly affecting the western section of the archipelago. Servando said the southwesterly wind flow is also bringing cloudy skies with scattered rains and thunderstorms over the BARMM (Bangsamoro Autonomous Region in Muslim Mindanao) and SOCCSKSARGEN (South Cotabato, Cotabato, Sultan Kudarat, Sarangani, and General Santos). Meanwhile, the state weather bureau said the trough, or extension of the low-pressure area outside the Philippine Area of Responsibility, has been bringing similar weather over the rest of Mindanao. The other weather system, easterlies – winds that carry warm, humid weather – has been affecting Eastern Visayas, bringing partly cloudy to cloudy skies with isolated rain showers or thunderstorms. Metro Manila and the rest of the country would experience isolated downpours or thunderstorms within 24 hours.

• Summer Movie Guide 2026 Here’ s what’ s coming to theaters and streaming from May to August (2026-05-25 21:00)

This summer at the movies, the Minions are filmmakers, the Mandalorian is working for the good guys, Matt Damon tries to find his way home (again), Anne Hathaway, Zendaya and Tom Holland are everywhere and no one remembers Peter Parker. Well, at least in the movie. The hope is that audiences not only remember but want to know what comes next for Spider-Man. Hollywood’ s summer movie season kicks off the first weekend in May not with a superhero movie but with “The Devil Wears Prada 2,” though one might argue that Miranda Priestly might be the Iron Man of fashion. May also brings a Billie Eilish concert film, the first “Star Wars” movie in seven years and a D-Day drama with Brendan Fraser as Dwight D. Eisenhower. June kicks off with a live-action He-Man, a John Carney musical (with Nick Jonas and Paul Rudd!), an original Steven Spielberg sci-fi spectacle, the return of Supergirl and Woody and Buzz as well. July brings a dose of Minions in 1920s Hollywood, Moana and a back-to-back dose of Holland and Zendaya, first in “Spider-Man: Brand New Day” and then in Christopher Nolan’ s adaptation of “The Odyssey” where Holland plays Odysseus’ son Telemachus and Zendaya is the goddess Athena. August ends the season with some comedy (“Super Troopers 3”), a supernatural horror (“The End of Oak Street”), a new Jane Schoenbrun film and two very different dog movies for two very different audiences. One is “PAW Patrol.” The other is a Ridley Scott-directed postapocalyptic survival movie. And that’ s not even counting the myriad streaming options, including a Ben Stiller pickleball movie, the return of Enola Holmes and a John Krasinski Jack Ryan movie. Here’ s The Associated Press’ guide to help make sense of the many, many options in theaters and at home.

OXON HILL, MD — The Scripps National Spelling Bee begins May 26, with 247 spellers representing 50 states, the District of Columbia, three U.S. territories and five other countries. They will compete in preliminary rounds on May 26, quarterfinals and semifinals on May 27, and finals on May 28, with the winner taking the unofficial crown of top speller in the English language. The bee moves this year to a new venue, Constitution Hall in downtown Washington, after more than a decade at a convention center just outside the city in Oxon Hill, Maryland. Mina Kimes, an NFL analyst for ESPN and the recent "Celebrity Jeopardy!" champion, will serve as the television host, the bee's first celebrity host since LeVar Burton in 2022.

PESHAWAR, Pakistan — A speeding minibus rammed into a bus parked along a motorway in northwest Pakistan on Monday, killing 17 people and injuring five others, police and rescue officials said. The crash occurred near Mardan in Khyber Pakhtunkhwa province when the minibus slammed into the parked bus, according to Shah Fahad, director-general of Rescue 1122 emergency services. He said preliminary findings suggested driver negligence caused the accident. The bus was carrying passengers to the scenic Swat Valley. Rescue workers and police shifted the dead and injured to a hospital, Fahad said. Road accidents are common in Pakistan because of poor infrastructure, reckless driving and weak enforcement of traffic safety regulations.

- Colombia vote tests leftist rule as violence surges (2026-05-25 17:23)

BOGOTÁ, Colombia — Colombians vote Sunday in a presidential election overshadowed by a surge in violence, facing a stark choice between extending four years of leftist rule or shifting sharply right. Barred from re-election, President Gustavo Petro leaves office after a turbulent term marked by car bombs, explosive drones and the assassination of a presidential candidate. But joblessness has fallen and wages have risen, and polls show Petro's protege, leftist Senator Ivan Cepeda, 63, as the front runner. The son of a slain senator, Cepeda has pledged to extend social programs and continue peace talks with armed groups, despite limited results. "I give him my vote because my life changed under this government," said 23-year-old Natalia Rojas, a design student in Bogota and a beneficiary of a subsidized education program. To win outright, Cepeda must secure more than half the vote. Polls predict a June 21 runoff against right wing lawyer Abelardo de la Espriella. Nicknamed "the Tiger," the 47 year old millionaire has no political experience and runs an eccentric campaign. He campaigns in a bulletproof vest and delivers a hardline security message. In an interview during the campaign, he told AFP he would seek US backing for a 90-day campaign of airstrikes and crop fumigation against cocaine-producing armed groups if elected. "What De la Espriella wants is to put the house in order," said Wilmer Bolivar, a 47 year old ex soldier. He compared the approach to El Salvador's popular president Nayib Bukele. The comparison is not accidental. De la Espriella has backed building Bukele-style megaprisons and his facial hair bears more than a passing resemblance to the Salvadoran leader. But De la Espriella faces a tight race for second against opposition Senator Paloma Valencia, aged 50. She is backed by political kingmaker and former president Alvaro Uribe. Deeply polarizing Petro led Colombia's first-ever leftist government and has been deeply polarizing. Poorer Colombians cheer his investment in social programs and the raising of the minimum wage. Unemployment fell, partly driven by state hiring. The country remains one of the most economically unequal in the world. "This election is marked by class struggle," said political scientist Alvaro Forero. "That is Petro's main electoral ammunition," he told AFP. To critics, Petro is erratic and his policy of "total peace" has let armed groups run rampant. The policy has so far failed to demobilize armed groups that survived the 2016 FARC peace deal. Experts say armed groups used talks to strengthen themselves. Colombia remains the world's largest cocaine producer, and much of the violence is tied to drug trafficking. Juanita Goebertus of Human Rights Watch said "2025 was a very bad year" for the country. Kidnappings more than doubled and displacement hit its highest level in nearly 20 years. Challenges Each candidate has faced serious threats throughout the campaign. Last year's killing of right wing candidate Miguel Uribe has left many Colombians nervous about a return to the bad old days. Rising drug trafficking also strained relations between Petro and US President Donald Trump. The dispute escalated into mutual insults and nearly derailed longstanding security cooperation. Whoever wins will inherit a country with serious security problems and a fiscal deficit that has ballooned to seven percent of GDP. Petro inherited a weak post pandemic economy, but since then tax collection has severely lagged behind bumper social spending. "What's at stake is continuing Petro's change agenda or rejecting it," Forero said.

- 40,000 people under evacuation orders for a chemical tank leak in Southern California
(2026-05-25 17:19)

Authorities in Southern California on Friday were racing to figure out how to prevent the explosion of a storage tank that has been leaking a hazardous chemical used to make plastic parts, as some 40,000 people were under evacuation orders in the area. A storage tank holding between 6,000 and 7,000 gallons (22,700 and 26,500 liters) of methyl methacrylate overheated Thursday and began venting vapors into the air at an aerospace plastics facility in Garden Grove, a city in Orange County, the local fire authority said. The tank could fail and crack, releasing the chemical onto the ground, or it could explode, Orange County Fire Authority Division Chief Craig Covey said Friday. “This thing is going to fail, and we don’t know when,” Covey said. “We’re doing our best to figure out when or how we can prevent it.” Officials ordered residents in Garden Grove to leave and expanded evacuation orders Friday to some residents of five other Orange County cities — Cypress, Stanton, Anaheim, Buena Park and Westminster — after being unable to stop the leak overnight on the tank at GKN Aerospace, which makes parts for commercial and military aircraft. No injuries or deaths have been reported, authorities said. In an update later Friday, Covey said authorities have been able to maintain the tank’s temperature, buying time to figure out how to fix it. Garden Grove is about 38 miles (61 kilometers) south of downtown Los Angeles and next to Anaheim, home to Disneyland’s two theme parks, which were not under evacuation orders Friday. Danny Pham said he was deep in a dream when his roommate banged on his door around 7 a.m. Friday morning and told him he needed to leave immediately. Pham had been working late the night before at a Vietnamese restaurant and had not seen the news. “It was shocking to me,” said Pham, who lives only a couple blocks from the plastics plant. “I didn’t know how serious it would be. I never knew that a thing like this could happen.” He left minutes later, grabbing only his wallet and passport, and took shelter at a friend’s restaurant in a neighboring city. By late Friday afternoon, Pham was still trying to figure out where he would stay the night and worrying that he had only the clothes on his back, possibly for days to come. Covey said crews have created containment barriers with sandbags in case there is a chemical spill from the tank to prevent the toxic chemical from getting into storm drains or reaching creeks or the nearby ocean. Dr. Regina Chinsio-Kwong, the county health officer, said if the chemical heats up, it can release a vapor that is harmful to people’s health. It can cause respiratory issues, itching and burning eyes, nausea and headaches. Crews were initially successful and were able to neutralize one of two damaged tanks, but Covey said they determined Friday morning that the remaining tank was “in the biggest crisis.” GKN Aerospace said specialized hazardous material teams are assessing the situation. “There are no reports of injuries at this time and our priority remains the safety of our employees, responders, and the surrounding community,” a spokesperson said in an emailed statement. “We will provide verified updates as soon as more information becomes available.” Kim Yen, a retiree in Garden Grove, was settling in for the night Thursday when she heard a sirenlike sound coming from her phone. An alert told her she needed to leave her home, which was just two blocks from the chemical leak. As Yen drove to her daughter’s house in Seal Beach, she worried that others in the local Vietnamese community might ignore or not understand the evacuation alert because it was in English. “They are family,” she said. “I’m hoping they stay alert and listen to the news and the authorities. This is scary.” Yen, who is originally from Vietnam and has lived in Orange County since 1980, quickly stopped by her house Friday morning to grab important documents and medications. By then her neighborhood was “a ghost town,” and she was comforted to see police officers going door to door to make sure everyone had evacuated. “We understand that this is frightening,” Garden Grove Mayor Stephanie Klopfenstein said. “But the evacuation orders are in place for your safety.” Local Vietnamese television stations translated updates from officials and urged residents to take the situation seriously.

- Serbian president deepens ties with China while facing pressure from protests at home (2026-05-25 17:16)

BEIJING, China — Serbian President Aleksandar Vucic deepened ties with China on Monday during a trip to Beijing as he faced pressure at home from anti-government protests in his Balkan country, including a major rally that prompted clashes over the weekend. After a meeting with Chinese President Xi Jinping, the two leaders witnessed the signing of more than 20 cooperation agreements, covering areas such as politics, trade, technology and education, Chinese state broadcaster CCTV reported. During their talks, Xi told Vucic that their countries should strengthen exchanges and cooperation to push their comprehensive strategic partnership to new heights. “China supports Serbia in persisting on a development path that suits its own national conditions, and is willing to strengthen exchanges of governance experience with Serbia,” CCTV quoted Xi as saying. Xi also said both sides should expand cooperation in artificial intelligence, digital economy and green energy to develop new growth drivers. In a joint statement released by Chinese official news agency Xinhua, both sides said countries must not politicize human rights issues, the two nations would promote sovereign equality, practice multilateralism and observe international rule of law. Vucic said Serbia attaches great importance to developing relations with China and steadfastly supports China’s core interests, CCTV reported. Xi awarded him a “friendship medal”, Xinhua said. Vucic, who began his five-day state visit to China on Sunday, is facing political pressure in his country. Clashes erupted between groups of protesters and riot police after Saturday’s huge anti-government rally by tens of thousands of his opponents in the Serbian capital of Belgrade. Vucic has sought to curb mass demonstrations that have shaken his hard-line rule in the Balkan country. But big crowds on Saturday suggested the dissent persists more than a year after protests first started to demand accountability for a deadly collapse at a train station in November 2024. The tragedy became a flashpoint for broader dissatisfaction with Serbia’s rule and has led to growing public demands for transparency in the graft-plagued country, which has carried out a quick series of large infrastructure projects, mostly with Chinese companies. Serbia is formally seeking European Union entry, but it has fostered ties with Russia and China. In Vucic’s opinion piece published by the South China Morning Post newspaper on Sunday, he said discussions about China in Europe are “too often clouded by suspicion and strategic anxiety.” “I understand that every major political community must guard its future, but I believe Europe should approach China not with fear and suspicion but with confidence and a serious, open-eyed willingness to cooperate,” he wrote.

- Trump links normalizing ties with Israel to Iran peace deal (2026-05-25 17:13)

WASHINGTON, United States — US President Donald Trump on Monday said Saudi Arabia and other Gulf nations must normalize ties with Israel as part of efforts to reach a deal with Iran, adding fresh uncertainty into protracted peace negotiations. Progress on a deal to end the conflict that broke out in late February has slowed as both sides talked down the prospect of an imminent agreement, with Tehran saying they were not close to signing and Trump warning he was in no hurry. In another hurdle for any deal, the US leader said it should be mandatory for

Qatar, Pakistan, Egypt, Turkey and Jordan to sign up to the Abraham Accords, a set of agreements brokered in 2020 with nations historically hostile to Israel. "After all the work done by the United States to try and pull this very complex puzzle together, it should be mandatory that all of these Countries, at a minimum, simultaneously, sign onto the Abraham Accords," he wrote in a lengthy social media post. "Those Countries discussed are Saudi Arabia, The United Arab Emirates (already a Member!), Qatar, Pakistan, Turkiye, Egypt, Jordan, and Bahrain (already a Member!)" Trump said he had spoken to the leaders of those countries on Saturday about efforts to end the war with Iran. Bahrain and the UAE have already signed the accords, along with Morocco and Sudan. US and Iranian forces have observed a ceasefire since April 8 while diplomats push for a negotiated settlement, although Iran has maintained controls on Gulf shipping through the Strait of Hormuz and the US Navy has sought to blockade Iran's ports. A high-level Iranian delegation that includes the country's top negotiator and foreign minister was in Doha on Monday to discuss an agreement with the US and the release of frozen funds, a source briefed on the matter told AFP. The visit was focusing "on issues relating to the Strait and highly enriched uranium", the source added. Trump said earlier on Monday that a deal with Iran would either be "great and meaningful" or there would be "no deal." But while the accords were welcomed by some as a foreign policy success, they remain deeply unpopular among the public in many parts of the Middle East, not least because they do not tackle the Israeli-Palestinian conflict. The issue is fraught as countries like Gulf heavyweights Saudi Arabia and Qatar have said they will never normalise ties with Israel unless an independent Palestinian state is created. Going crazy Anna Jacobs of the Arab Gulf States Institute in Washington said Trump's latest demand added to the disaster that has been the war on all fronts for Gulf nations. "The national security of the Gulf states has been threatened more than ever before because of President Trump's reckless decisions, and he expects Arab states to thank him and to normalize relations with Israel, which they will not do at this stage," she said. "These expectations and assumptions from this US administration shows how little they understand the Middle East." Trump's maximalist demand came after top US diplomat Marco Rubio suggested a deal could be reached within the day, causing world oil prices to tumble based on renewed optimism about an agreement. "We thought we might have some news last night, maybe today," Secretary of State Rubio told reporters during a visit to New Delhi, referring to hopes for a deal. "We have what I think is a pretty solid thing on the table in terms of their ability to open up the straits, get the straits open." But Iran's foreign ministry spokesman Esmail Baqaei poured cold water on hopes for a quick final settlement. "It is correct to say that we have reached a conclusion on a large portion of the issues under discussion," he told a weekly news briefing. "But to say that this means the signing of an agreement is imminent -- no one can make such a claim." In Iran's capital Tehran, residents who spoke to Paris-based journalists said they were losing patience at the lack of diplomatic progress. "We're going crazy. Imagine getting hopeful ten times a day, and disappointed a hundred times a day," said Amir, 40. "We're all frustrated." Critical moment Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu said on Sunday that he and Trump had agreed that "any final agreement with Iran must eliminate the nuclear threat entirely." Iranian officials have stressed that, despite the long-standing US demand for an end to its uranium enrichment, talks on the issue of the Islamic republic's nuclear programme have been deferred until after an initial agreement. Meanwhile, Pakistan's Prime Minister Shehbaz Sharif -- whose government is spearheading efforts to mediate a negotiated agreement between the United States and Iran -- met China's President Xi Jinping in Beijing. Speaking to Chinese leaders, Sharif said "the world is passing through a critical moment," Pakistan's state-run PTV channel showed. "Things are moving in the right direction. I would like to thank China's support to promote peace."

- Cuba hits back at EU top diplomat's comments over crisis (2026-05-25 17:07)

HAVANA, Cuba — Cuba on Monday criticized EU top diplomat Kaja Kallas for a lack of "objectivity" in her comments about the economic and energy crises on the US-blockaded island. Kallas, the European Union's foreign policy chief, told reporters in Mexico on Thursday that Cuba's current hardship had followed "decades of mismanagement and political repression." "Cuban people deserve opportunity and freedom, and no more control and isolation," she said. Washington imposed an energy blockade on Cuba in January as part of its bid to exert maximum pressure on the communist-run island. The move has worsened living conditions for Cubans, with frequent blackouts and supply shortages becoming a daily reality. US President Donald Trump has also openly mused about taking over the island. Cuban Foreign Minister Bruno Rodriguez said Kallas's comment "reveals a marked double standard." "Failing to acknowledge that the illegal, cruel and unjust collective punishment the US government is imposing on the Cuban people -- with an unprecedented tightening of the blockade, the oil embargo and the military threat -- are the main causes of the difficult situation Cubans are facing today undermines objectivity," he said on X. Government policy over the last decade had "broad popular consensus" and was part of "internal affairs," he added. Trump on May 1 issued an executive order that imposed a further wave of sanctions on Cuba and threatened secondary sanctions on the operations of foreign companies there, including several European companies. Rodriguez asked why Kallas had not voiced "concern or support" for these affected businesses and individuals. In 2017, the EU and Cuba entered an agreement calling for political dialogue and cooperation. Washington last week ramped up tensions by indicting former Cuban president Raul Castro in a case dating back to 1996, which Havana warns could serve as a pretext to justify US military intervention on the island.

ANTIBES, France — Actors and celebrities at the Cannes Film Festival were coaxed off the Croisette and up the French Riviera coast to Antibes on Thursday for dinner, performances and the annual amfAR Gala auction, which raised millions for AIDS research. Guests were treated to a lavish reception on the Hotel Du Cap, Eden Roc, lawn, followed by performances from Robbie Williams, Zara Larsson and Lizzo over dinner. The gala was hosted by Geena Davis, who appears on this year's festival poster, a tribute to "Thelma & Louise." Lizzo teased her new album on the red carpet. "I'm just so excited. I'm trying to bring back good, clean fun. Like, I just want to have fun again, people need to dance, people need to laugh." Other guests included Rami Malek who has a film in competition in Cannes, Eva Longoria, Heidi Klum, Sofia Carson, Natasha Poly and Bar Refaeli. An array of art, jewelry and experiences were auctioned. Actor William Abadie auctioned off a walk-on part in “Emily in Paris” while confirming the sixth season will be the show’s last. After some enthusiastic bidding, two opportunities were given for a turn in the limelight, for 375,000 euros ($435,545) each. Some of the artwork raised the bar with a famed full set of Andy Warhol screen prints of Marilyn Monroe fetching 2.8 million euros ($3,252,228). Festival sponsor Chopard donated diamond earrings that sold for 600,000 euros ($696,906). And a limited-edition Audemars Piguet watch — one of only five — went for an eye-watering 1,450,000 euros ($1,684,160). Williams performed a medley of his hits ending with “Angels” dedicated to his daughter. A surprise lot of VIP concert tickets was split between two bidders at 220,000 euros ($255,5278) each for two sets of tickets each. Larsson closed the dinner with a high-energy performance that lured diners into dancing in front of the stage. The guests then moved to the after-party around the hotel’s pool to dance and celebrate. Since 1985, amfAR has raised nearly 841 million euros ($950 million) in support of AIDS research and programs and awarded more than 3,800 grants.

- Stephen Colbert is back on TV on community access in Michigan along with rocker Jack White (2026-05-25 16:37)

NEW YORK — One night after Stephen Colbert recorded his final episode of “The Late Show” on CBS, he made a surprise appearance hosting the “Only in Monroe” community access show broadcast in southeast Michigan along the shores of Lake Erie. Michigan native Jack White, who grew up in Detroit about 40 miles northeast of Monroe, joined Colbert as his “volunteer music director.” “Looking forward to hearing some of your music, time permitting,” Colbert joked with White, as laughter could be heard from a handful of people off camera. Colbert interviewed actor Jeff Daniels during the hourlong broadcast that leaned heavily into Michigan-centric jokes. Actor Steve Buscemi appeared in a recorded bit joking about Buscemi’s Pizza in Monroe. Rapper Eminem, who was raised in Detroit, appeared on tape as the “fire marshal” who approves setting fire to remnants of the set that Colbert, White and Daniels destroyed at the end of the show. Colbert also spoke via FaceTime with comedian Byron Allen, who will be hosting “Comics Unleashed” that is replacing Colbert’s canceled “Late Show.” “The community access program’s normal hosts, Michelle Baumann and former Miss America Kaye Lani Rae Rafko Wilson, sucked helium from balloons with Colbert while discussing Baumann’s battle with cancer. A warning on the screen said, “Former professional TV host, do not try this at home.” It marked the second time Colbert has hosted “Only in Monroe.” As he said during the surprise Friday broadcast, he previously hosted an episode in the summer of 2015 just before taking over “Late Night” from David Letterman. It was not clear where or when Colbert recorded the latest episode, which aired exactly 24 hours after his final “Late Night” show. Messages left Saturday seeking comment from the community access channel were not immediately returned.

- 4 dead, 17 still missing in collapsed building in Angeles City (2026-05-25 16:21)

(UPDATE) ANGELES CITY — Rescuers using thermal scanners and sniffer dogs pursued a search for survivors on Monday, more than 30 hours after the collapse of a nine-story building under construction that has already claimed four lives, authorities said. More than a dozen people are believed to be still missing after rescuers failed to bring out alive two trapped construction workers who had been found buried beneath the rubble in Barangay Balibago, Angeles City on Sunday. “We have detected signs of life” among the ruins, Maria Leah Sajiri, the regional spokeswoman for the fire bureau, told reporters. “Rescue operations are ongoing.” The rescuers, led by local firemen, said they are using infrared technology to detect human body heat beneath the rubble. Earlier Monday, two workers who were found alive and pinned beneath the wreckage of the nine-story structure, later died despite rescue efforts. “The first of the two was pulled out alive, but unfortunately, his body gave out and he did not survive. Doctors could not resuscitate him,” Sajiri said. “The other one suffered a cardiac arrest around 3:00 a.m. Doctors could not attend to him as he was still pinned down,” she added. A Malaysian guest at a nearby hotel damaged by the collapsed building was also killed Sunday, while crews pulled another corpse from the rubble on Monday. It was not immediately clear if the unidentified body belonged to a person listed among the missing, rescuers said in an updated toll. The Malaysian Embassy in Manila confirmed that two Malaysians were affected by the building collapse in Angeles City, Pampanga — with one confirmed safe. “Currently all necessary efforts are being made to locate and establish contact with the next of kin of both individuals,” the embassy said in a statement. The retrieved bodies were identified as Mohd Rezal Abdullah, a Malaysian, Mark Laurence Capungay and Properio Alikaway, both residents of Marilao, Bulacan. The fourth body is still being identified to see if it belongs to a construction worker or the reported vendor outside the collapsed building. Due to the uncertainty, authorities said about 17 other people were still considered missing, mostly construction workers who were sleeping at the building site when disaster struck. Lea Casilao, girlfriend of a missing construction worker, said she had taken a bus from her Manila home to Angeles with rice and canned goods for her partner on Sunday, unaware of the pre-dawn accident on the same day. “It’s very difficult; it is breaking my heart to wait for something uncertain,” 47-year-old Casilao said, crying as she recounted how she slept alone at a local government building overnight Sunday. Search to continue Search, rescue and retrieval operations will continue as long as there are people still unaccounted for, the Department of the Interior and Local Government (DILG) said Monday. “Until someone is found, until someone is saved, the operation continues,” the DILG said in a statement, as rescue teams pressed on with efforts at the Teodoro Street construction site that collapsed before dawn. The department said that the safety and preservation of life remain its highest priority, while also recognizing the “extraordinary courage” of responders working under highly unstable and dangerous conditions. As of 12 noon on May 25, authorities reported 26 people rescued, four confirmed fatalities and 17 still missing. Rescue efforts are being led on-site by the Bureau of Fire Protection in coordination with other government agencies and local disaster response units. A total of 267 personnel remain deployed, including members of the BFP Special Rescue Force, emergency medical teams, and augmentation units from Pampanga and neighboring provinces in Central Luzon. The Philippine National Police (PNP) said it provided assistance to local authorities as well as emergency response units in Angeles City, Pampanga, while investigating the collapse of the hotel under construction. “The PNP... will assist in the conduct of the investigation to determine the circumstances that led to the incident in the interest of truth and accountability. But, for now... the focus is on search and rescue operations,” said PNP chief Gen. Jose Melencio Nartatez Jr. “Every second matters in a crisis, and our duty is to act without delay, bringing every available asset to save lives, account for the missing, and support affected families on the ground,” he added. The Metropolitan Manila Development Authority’s Search and Rescue team was also on site to locate people trapped beneath the rubble. The MMDA said the SAR team had already entered parts of the damaged structure and was conducting a technical search using advanced equipment such as a vibraphone and life locator to determine the exact location of possible survivors under the debris. Lacking safety gear The cause of the collapse is not known. Regional labor department director Geraldine Panlilio said she had briefly shut the project down in September 2024 over violations of occupational safety standards. “Our labor inspectors had monitored poor working conditions, a violation that would put our workers at risk,” she said in an interview over radio DZMM. The construction workers “lacked safety gear” like hardhats, boots, safety belts and lifelines, and worked under poor lighting and with no visible safety signs, she added. Construction resumed a month later after the building contractor complied with requirements, Panlilio said. Officials said up to 70 people were employed at the construction site, though most had gone home for the weekend. Alfredo Albis, 55, said he was asleep at a barracks for workers about five meters from the structure when it gave way. “I have two cousins who are still trapped there. They were working here to earn for their families and (they) are missing,” he said, adding “there’s a possibility that my relatives are dead.” Sajili, the fire bureau spokeswoman, said that “rescue in (a) building collapse is very challenging since any sudden shift triggered by the movements of our rescuers can cause areas to move and people under can get crushed.” If no more survivors are found via scanners, earthmoving equipment will be brought in to clear debris and recover bodies, she said, but gave no timeline. Government assistance The Department of Social Welfare and Development (DSWD) extended immediate assistance, distributing family food packs, hygiene kits, and ready-to-eat food packs to affected individuals and families in the area. Each of the 34 affected individuals also received P10,000 in financial assistance from the agency. Assistant Secretary Irene Dumlao of the DSWD Disaster Response Management Group said the department continues to monitor the situation closely while preparing additional interventions if needed. - Imee's 'horrible' video struck off the record (2026-05-25 16:19)

THE Senate minority bloc won in its bid to strike off the record a video contained in the privilege speech of Sen. Imee Marcos that linked members of the group to an alleged Charter change (Cha-cha) campaign, denouncing it as untrue and a “propaganda tool.” Except for Sen. Lito Lapid, the rest of the minority bloc stood up to support the motion of Sen. Juan Miguel Zubiri to remove the “horrible” video from the Senate records, saying they never discussed Cha-cha in any of their meetings. Sen. Rodante Marcoleta opposed Zubiri’s motion, but Marcos later on relented and agreed to remove the video from her privilege speech. Zubiri, in turn, withdrew his motion. The video in question showed that Senate Minority Leader Vicente Sotto III allegedly discussed Cha-cha with House Speaker Faustino Dy III, allegedly to push term extension, indicating a “no election” scenario in 2028. But Zubiri said the contents of the video sowed intrigue. “It’s unparliamentary. We just want to bring back the integrity of this same chamber,” he said. Zubiri motioned to strike it off the records for violating the Senate Rules particularly Sections 93, 94, 95, on unparliamentary acts and language. “I just want to point out that the video that the lady senator presented was obviously opinionated, a propaganda tool, [and] it should be stricken off the record,” he said. Senate as circus Zubiri said that if Marcos is dissatisfied with the government, she “should direct her anger toward her brother,” President Ferdinand Marcos Jr. “Curse her brother. But she should not drag other people who have nothing to do with that [Cha-cha moves],” he said. “Cannot we discuss that as a group, as a body? That we fight for our integrity? For the good name to be brought back? For people like Diokno, people like Tañada, people like Aquino, people like Salonga, even Frank Drilon, people like Miriam Defensor Santiago, Joker Arroyo, who stood here for what was the best times of our institution. Have we forgotten that and we’ve made it already like a circus?” he added. Sotto denied any involvement in Cha-cha efforts. “I have nothing to do with that.” Sen. Erwin Tulfo said, “We need respect. We deserve respect. We must not tolerate presentation of unparliamentary acts.” “Clearly, disinformation has no place in this plenary hall,” said Sen. Francis Pangilinan. Sen. Sherwin Gatchalian said, “For the record, we never discussed Charter change.” Sen. Panfilo Lacson described Marcos’ allegations as “outright lies, flat out lies.” “Many of us here will not allow a ‘no election’ scenario,” Sen. Bam Aquino said. “Let’s move on. We have been a circus for the past few days. We’ve become the butt of the jokes,” said Sen. Raffy Tulfo. “It’s so embarrassing. Are we going to be always like this?” Sen. Risa Hontiveros asked. “Let us not to be used as platform for misinformation. We must bring back the trust of the people,” said Sen. JV Ejercito. Solid Block 11 Hontiveros said the minority’s “Solid Block 11” (SB-11) would focus on reviving the image of the Senate as it continues to negotiate to install Gatchalian as the new Senate president. The senator on Monday said so far the SB-11 has not been able to convince any member from the 13-man majority group, led by Senate President Alan Peter Cayetano. Aside from Hontiveros and Gatchalian, the other SB-11 members are Sens. Bam Aquino, Panfilo Lacson, Lito Lapid, Kiko Pangilinan, Vicente Sotto III, Erwin Tulfo, Raffy Tulfo, and Migz Zubiri. “No one has been added [so far to the minority bloc]. We are solid 11 in the minority,” Hontiveros said in Filipino during a briefing. She said the “new majority” that the SB-11 wanted to form would be “on the basis of common values, common interest.” “Well, if Senator Win becomes SP that would be good for the Senate,” Hontiveros said. “I have worked with him for about a decade. He is serious about his work as legislator. He stays on the [Senate] floor. He always discusses work with his staff and puts importance on the dignity [of the Senate],” she added. Asked to confirm reports that Sen. Francis Escudero might join the minority to unseat Cayetano, she said, “I heard about that discussion.” “As I mentioned, if it would be Senator Win [to replace Cayetano]. That would be good for the Senate,” Hontiveros said. Pangilinan, in a television interview, confirmed that there were discussions to encourage Escudero to jump to the minority bloc, but these were immediately shot down. “There were intermediaries but not Senator Chiz himself. It was not pursued because the proposition is not acceptable to the Solid 11,” he said. Pangilinan declined to discuss the SB-11’s moves to muster the 13 votes to remove Cayetano. “I’m not part of those assigned from our group to explore a Win Gatchalian Senate presidency. There are several senators on our end doing backchannel talks,” he said.

- Interpol Red Notice sought for dela Rosa (2026-05-25 16:18)

(UPDATE) THE Department of Justice (DOJ) confirmed that the Philippines is seeking an Interpol Red Notice against Sen. Ronald dela Rosa, intensifying efforts to arrest the fugitive lawmaker on the basis of a warrant issued by the International Criminal Court (ICC) for crimes against humanity during the Duterte administration’s bloody war on drugs. DOJ spokesman Polo Martinez said the application for an Interpol Red Notice Forms part of the legal remedies available to authorities pursuing dela Rosa. An Interpol Red Notice is a request circulated among law enforcement agencies worldwide to locate and provisionally arrest an individual pending extradition or similar legal action. If issued, all 195 Interpol member countries may assist in locating and detaining the subject. The move came as law enforcers continued searching for dela Rosa, who has remained out of public view since May 14. Justice Secretary Frederick Vida earlier declared dela Rosa a fugitive from justice and directed both the Philippine National Police (PNP) and the National Bureau of Investigation (NBI) to enforce the ICC arrest warrant. The warrant covers allegations of crimes against humanity involving murder in connection with at least 32 killings linked to anti-drug operations conducted between July 2016 and April 2018 under the administration of former president Rodrigo Duterte. Duterte is detained at The Hague in the Netherlands awaiting trial. The Supreme Court on May 20 denied dela Rosa’s petition for a temporary restraining order seeking to stop his arrest. Voting 9-5-1, the tribunal allowed authorities to proceed with enforcement. The Court is expected to release its full resolution, including concurring and dissenting opinions, on Monday. Dela Rosa’s wife Grace on Monday posted an appeal to the judiciary not to be an accessory to bringing her husband to The Hague to face trial for crimes against humanity. Grace Nancy dela Rosa made the appeal in an open letter to the judiciary which she posted on Facebook. “Please do not be an accessory to bringing my husband to the Hague. Every Filipino must be tried in his own country,” she said. 100 guns Amid the continuing manhunt, NBI Director Melvin Matibag confirmed that the bureau has requested the cancellation of firearms licenses for more than 100 guns reportedly registered under dela Rosa’s name. In an interview, Matibag said the NBI had already sent a letter to the PNP seeking revocation of the licenses. The firearms reportedly include automatic rifles, high-powered firearms, and shotguns. The bureau previously tagged dela Rosa as “armed and dangerous” in relation to ongoing efforts to locate and arrest him. Authorities also cited the senator’s background as a former PNP chief as a “major concern,” saying it could complicate enforcement operations. But the PNP on Monday said it has not received word from the NBI regarding its request that the firearm licenses be revoked. Bounty considered Matibag also disclosed that the DOJ is studying the possibility of offering a bounty or reward for information that could lead to dela Rosa’s arrest. “Again, the lead agency here is the Department of Justice. I believe that is being studied and considered, but they will be the ones to announce it,” Matibag said. He clarified that the NBI’s primary role remains operational, particularly in locating the senator and carrying out lawful arrest orders. “Our role is really to locate him and effect the arrest based on the warrant issued by the ICC,” he said. Matibag added that the NBI continues coordinating with other law enforcement agencies, including the PNP, as authorities pursue leads on dela Rosa’s whereabouts. The NBI chief also said there is still no official record showing that dela Rosa has left the country. “If we base it on the records of the Bureau of Immigration, there is still no record of his departure,” Matibag said. However, he acknowledged that investigators remain cautious because undocumented exits remain possible, citing the country’s numerous entry and exit points and past incidents involving unrecorded departures.

Flood of unreliable information Matibag said authorities continue pursuing several leads regarding dela Rosa’s possible location, but noted that investigators are also dealing with a flood of unreliable information from the public. “There are many people giving us information that we cannot simply ignore, so we still need to validate these reports, but many eventually turn out negative and cause delays in operations,” he said. The NBI director also warned of what he described as a growing spread of misinformation and online exploitation linked to the case, including individuals allegedly using the search for the senator to scam people for money. According to Matibag, some individuals fabricate stories based on circulating news reports before attempting to solicit money from the public. “Please be careful because there are many of these now,” he said, adding that the NBI has already identified some individuals allegedly involved in such schemes and is monitoring them. Matibag also cautioned against inflammatory and extreme statements circulating online related to the case, warning that such rhetoric could mislead the public and aggravate tensions. He expressed concern that some individuals may be influenced by calls encouraging violence or self-sacrifice in support of political beliefs, saying authorities are closely monitoring activities that could lead to public disorder.

Mayors speak out Also on Monday, the Mayors for Good Governance questioned the prolonged absence of dela Rosa from Senate sessions, saying ordinary workers would face penalties for the same conduct while still receiving government pay. In a statement, the group said dela Rosa was allegedly absent for about seven months before appearing again on May 14, 2026, to vote in the change of Senate leadership. The organization said the senator continued receiving an estimated monthly salary of about P300,000, which it said could already total about P2.1 million during the period of absence. “For Filipino workers, the rule is ‘no work, no pay.’ If an ordinary employee did this, whether in government or the private sector, he would surely face suspension or dismissal from work. Why does the law seem different when powerful officials are involved?” the group said. The group said such alleged neglect of duty was unacceptable for officials being paid by taxpayers while Filipinos continue to face high prices, poverty, and livelihood difficulties. “It is a huge insult to millions of Filipinos who continue striving and enduring hardships just to support themselves and their families,” the statement read. The organization also called on senators not to allow the Senate to become “a refuge for absenteeism and cover-ups,” saying elected officials should not be protected while allegedly avoiding their responsibilities and continuing to receive salaries from public funds. “The lawmakers themselves should lead in following the law, especially the spirit behind why laws were created — for accountability, integrity, and the welfare of the Filipino people,” the group added.

- Defense, energy top priorities in Marcos state visit to Japan (2026-05-25 16:17)

PRESIDENT Ferdinand Marcos Jr. is expected to push for strengthened collaboration in security and energy resilience when he embarks on a state visit to Japan, which runs from May 26 to 29, the Department of Foreign Affairs (DFA) said on Monday. Marcos, accompanied by first lady Liza Araneta-Marcos and some members of the Cabinet, will also seek deeper cooperation in the fields of maritime and defense, economy, and “emerging and future-oriented sectors” when he meets with Prime Minister Sanae Takaichi. “The two leaders are also expected to discuss regional and global issues affecting the Philippines and Japan such as Asean (Association of Southeast Asian Nations), challenges in the Indo-Pacific region, and developments in the Middle East,” DFA spokesman Analyn Ratonel said in Filipino in a pre-departure briefing in Malacañang. “The two countries are expected to announce new agreements on defense, trade and investment, and human resources. The president is also scheduled to meet with Japanese business groups and members of the Filipino community in Japan,” she added. Apart from the face-to-face with Takaichi, Marcos is also slated to have an audience with The Emperor and Empress at the Imperial Palace for a welcome ceremony and a state call. This will be followed by a state banquet in honor of the president and the first lady. “The president is also scheduled to meet with Japanese business groups and members of the Filipino community in Japan,” Ratonel said. The Philippines and Japan commemorate this year the 70th anniversary of the normalization of their diplomatic relations.

- PNP asked to probe possible sabotage of transmission line (2026-05-25 16:16)

THE National Grid Corporation of the Philippines (NGCP) has asked the Philippine National Police (PNP) to investigate the possible sabotage of a huge transmission line in Batangas province. In a letter to PNP chief Gen. Jose Melencio Nartatez Jr. and Batangas City Police head Lt. Col. Lira Morello, the NGCP pointed to the Ilijan-Tayabas 500-kiloVolt (kV) transmission line that tripped on May 13, 2026. The NGCP said the incident occurred after the conductor between Towers 129 and 130 in Barangay Haligue Silangan, also in the city, was severed. The transmission disturbance resulted in the loss of around 1,700 MW of power delivered from generating plants connected to the line. Initial findings following inspections conducted by NGCP personnel showed severance reportedly occurred within the conductor span between spacers and exhibited characteristics that suggested deliberate human intervention. To ensure a thorough and impartial investigation, the NGCP said it was seeking the help of the PNP. It then assured authorities of its full cooperation and committed to provide all relevant technical findings and information needed for the investigation. “Protecting the integrity and security of the country’s transmission network remains critical to maintaining reliable power delivery nationwide,” NGCP said. The privately owned corporation, which is in charge of operating, maintaining, and developing the country’s state-owned power grid, lamented that the incident has affected the already thin generation reserves in Luzon and Visayas, which eventually led to the declaration of red and yellow alerts in both grids. The NGCP, in a statement emailed to The Manila Times, noted that the damage appeared to be inconsistent with normal wear-and-tear or natural causes. It added that prior inspections on the line also showed no defect or abnormality that could have caused such damage. As the country continues to experience tight power supply conditions during periods of high demand, the NGCP cited the importance of safeguarding critical transmission infrastructure.

- Most Filipinos back territorial defense (2026-05-25 16:15)

A SURVEY commissioned by the Armed Forces of the Philippines (AFP) suggests that patriotism and territorial defense remain strong unifying sentiments among Filipinos. The first-quarter survey by Octa Research found that 76 percent of adult Filipinos are willing to support the government in defending Philippine territory and asserting sovereign rights, including in the West Philippine Sea (WPS). The survey, however, also notes that while some regions posted near-unanimous support, others showed unusually high skepticism — particularly in parts of Mindanao and Central Visayas. “The survey’s most critical outlier is the Davao Region,” Octa said, after the area registered the country’s highest disagreement rate at 34 percent — nearly five times the national average of 7 percent. Respondents were asked whether they agreed with the statement: “I love my country, and I am committed to support the government in defending its territory and asserting sovereign rights, including over the West Philippine Sea.” Nationally, only 17 percent said they were undecided. Support was strongest in Metro Manila, where 83 percent agreed with the statement, followed by Balance Luzon at 77 percent. Mimaropa — home to Palawan, the country’s western frontier facing the disputed waters — recorded the highest regional support at 93 percent. Caraga posted 91 percent, and Western Visayas 90 percent. Central Visayas had the lowest agreement rate nationwide at 45 percent, revealing what Octa described as a “48-point gap” between regions. The findings come amid continuing tensions in the West Philippine Sea, where Philippine vessels have repeatedly encountered Chinese maritime forces near contested features. The survey suggests that support for territorial defense is not confined to elites or highly educated sectors. Class D respondents — who comprise the bulk of the population — matched the national average exactly at 76 percent, while rural respondents posted nearly identical support levels as their urban counterparts. “This confirms that patriotic sentiment is deeply rooted in the mass base of Filipino society,” Octa said. The poll also showed that vocational graduates registered the strongest backing for territorial defense at 85 percent, surpassing even college and postgraduate respondents at 80 percent. Filipinos aged 45 to 54 posted the lowest support levels among all age groups at 71 percent. Octa suggested that economic concerns may partly explain the hesitation among middle-aged respondents, saying they could be more cautious about the potential costs of geopolitical conflict. The survey was conducted from March 19 to 25, using face-to-face interviews with 1,200 respondents nationwide. It carried a ± 3 percent margin of error at a 95-percent confidence level.

- DOJ probes dela Rosa escape from Senate (2026-05-25 16:14)

SEN. Robinhood Padilla could be among those summoned in the investigation of the Department of Justice (DOJ) into the disappearance of Sen. Ronald “Bato” dela Rosa. National Bureau of Investigation (NBI) Director Melvin Matibag said Monday the DOJ will set the direction of the investigation and decide the individuals who will be summoned. Matibag said Padilla is among the persons of interest who may be asked to shed light on the senator’s last known movements. Padilla admitted that he used his car in bringing dela Rosa out from the Senate and dropping him off on Ayala Avenue in Makati City, where dela Rosa’s own vehicle was waiting. Matibag said that Padilla has been singled out for questioning. “If there is a clear instruction to us, that is when we will summon those who need to be summoned,” he said. Matibag said Padilla’s account is considered potentially significant, since he was the last known companion of dela Rosa before the senator went missing. He urged Padilla to voluntarily cooperate with the DOJ investigations. Padilla has denied any wrongdoing, saying he did not know what happened after he dropped dela Rosa off and rejecting claims that he helped the senator evade authorities. He also pointed out that there was no arrest warrant at the time. The NBI cited security footage showing a white Toyota van, reportedly registered under Padilla’s name, leaving the Senate complex around 2:30 a.m. on May 14. The departure came hours after a shooting incident at the Senate premises, which has been included in the broader investigation.

- Marcos names Tolentino as new Labor secretary (2026-05-25 16:13)

PRESIDENT Ferdinand Marcos Jr. named former senator Francis Tolentino as the new Acting Secretary of the Department of Labor and Employment (DOLE), Malacañang announced on Monday. Palace Press Officer Claire Castro said in a briefing that Tolentino’s appointment was prompted by the decision of Labor Secretary Bienvenido Laguesma’s decision to step down due to health reasons and after the one-year appointment ban on losing 2025 elections candidates lapsed earlier this month. Tolentino was a senatorial candidate of the Marcos-backed Alyansa Para sa Bagong Pilipinas. Asked if Laguesma would be given another government post in the future, Castro stressed she could not preempt the president’s decision, and that it would also largely depend on Laguesma’s medical state. A senator from 2016 to 2022, Tolentino was also chairman of the Metropolitan Manila Development Authority (MMDA) from 2010 to 2015 and mayor of Tagaytay City from 1994 to 2004. The leadership changed at DOLE is the latest in the Marcos Cabinet. Last week, the president appointed Kim Robert de Leon to head of the Department of Budget and Management (DBM).

- Leachon sues Recto over PhilHealth funds (2026-05-25 16:12)

PHYSICIAN Tony Leachon on Monday filed a case of plunder and technical malversation against Executive Secretary Ralph Recto and several other respondents over the transfer of P60 billion from the Philippine Health Insurance Corp. (PhilHealth) to the national treasury. Leachon said in a media interview that patients were not able to use the amount. In a statement, Recto called the complaint “harassment” and said the transfer was mandated under the General Appropriations Act (GAA) of 2024. “The Supreme Court justices themselves said that I have no criminal liability because I ‘simply followed the law and implemented it in good faith,’ ” Recto said. The complaint “should not be tossed aside gently. It should be thrown out with great force,” he said in a statement. Recto insisted that the transfer, done when he was still secretary of the Department of Finance, was mandated by law under the General Appropriations Act (GAA) of 2024. The “excess” PhilHealth funds have since been restored. Recto said the case “is nothing but a harassment case by a person masquerading as a health reformer, a perennial applicant for Health offices across several presidencies, but always rejected despite his aggressive self-promotion.” “His claim that I have financially benefited from said PhilHealth funds is an outright falsehood. This is libelous,” he said.

- Vico Sotto suspends 2 City Hall employees (2026-05-25 16:11)

PASIG Mayor Vico Sotto on Monday said two city government employees were placed under preventive suspension over alleged solicitation from contractors and fixing activities, as he intensified his anti-corruption campaign to include lower levels of the bureaucracy. Sotto said the suspensions reflected the city’s continuing effort to change what he described as deeply rooted corruption practices in government that had long been tolerated or considered normal. One of the suspended employees was from the City Social Welfare and Development Office (CSWDO), who was allegedly caught soliciting from a contractor connected to the office. Sotto said practices such as asking contractors for birthday or Christmas party contributions may have been treated casually in government before, but stressed these should not be tolerated, especially when public contracts are involved. “This is something that may have become a habit in government, like it’s nothing serious, that it’s not bribery anyway, or the contract was already awarded, so maybe it’s OK to ask for birthday money or Christmas party contributions,” Sotto said. He noted that Pasig City had prohibited contractors from giving contributions to City Hall events and activities shortly after he assumed office in 2019. Another suspended employee from the City Treasurer’s Department allegedly admitted to acting as a fixer for clients, according to the mayor. Sotto said both employees were only under preventive suspension pending administrative proceedings, adding that the cases would still undergo hearings before authorities determine whether they should face heavier penalties, including dismissal from service. The mayor also revealed that personnel from the city’s legal department were under investigation, although he declined to provide details because proceedings were ongoing. Sotto linked the suspensions to the broader reform campaign his administration has pursued since 2019, saying efforts initially focused on procurement systems and operations inside City Hall before expanding toward the village level during his third term. He said investigations involving some village officials were also ongoing before the Pasig City Council’s Blue Ribbon Committee, with preventive suspensions imposed to prevent possible interference with witnesses or evidence. Without naming specific officials, Sotto pointed to alleged cases involving questionable handling of public funds at the village level, including advance releases of community development funds and reports of funds allegedly being used for personal expenses. “It cannot continue that public funds are handled this way for life,” he said. The mayor acknowledged that pursuing administrative cases against government workers and officials could be personally difficult, especially when some involved individuals were known to him, but said reforms would fail if violations continued to be tolerated. He also urged residents to continue reporting irregularities involving public funds while remaining fair in recognizing officials who perform their duties properly.

- Binondo fire ‘a problem’ but recovery plan ‘soon’ (2026-05-25 16:10)

(UPDATE) MANILA Mayor Isko Moreno admitted on Monday that his government was faced with the “problem” of helping residents affected by last week’s fire of recovering “soon” but assured them that there was “a plan” and hoped to bring some “good news” to the victims. Speaking at the city’s weekly flag ceremony, Moreno said the city government was already preparing measures to help “within the day” more than 2,000 displaced residents after the fire that struck Binondo. “The problem now is how they will recover soon. But, again, in our own little way, we have a plan. Hopefully, within a day, we can bring some good news to our fellow Manileños,” said Moreno. In a previous interview, Moreno said the city would provide financial assistance to affected families. The blaze erupted Saturday afternoon at the Parola Compound and escalated to Task Force Charlie before firefighters were able to fully extinguish it after around six hours.

- Maynilad: emergency repairs slated (2026-05-25 16:09)

(UPDATE) MAYNILAD Water Services Inc. on Monday said that it was conducting emergency repair activities on a damaged pipeline in Ermita, Manila, to prevent further water loss in affected areas. “We are currently undertaking emergency repair works to prevent further water loss. Water service will resume gradually after repair completion, system re-energization, and pressure build-up. Mobile water tankers are being deployed as needed to assist affected customers,” Maynilad said. The company said that it was also validating the latest repair completion and service restoration estimate, as well as the final affected customer count. Parts of Las Piñas City, Parañaque City, and Pasay City in Metro Manila and parts of Bacoor City, Cavite City, Imus City, Noveleta, Kawit, and Rosario in Cavite experienced unannounced water interruptions on May 24, starting at 5 a.m. because a 750-millimeter-diameter water pipeline along A. Villegas Street corner N. Lopez Street was damaged by a drainage contractor of the Manila City government, prompting emergency repairs. The water concessionaire said that repairs were initially projected to be done by May 26 at 1 a.m.

- Mass tree-cutting in Manila a ‘direct assault on the poor’ (2026-05-25 16:08)

CARITAS Philippines said the mass-cutting of trees along Quirino Avenue in Manila was a “direct assault on the poor.” The Department of Environment and Natural Resources (DENR) has authorized cutting 600 trees to make way for the construction of San Miguel Corporation’s Southern Access Link Expressway project, which will connect the Skyway to Roxas Boulevard. About 200 trees have been taken down. Caritas Philippines President Bishop Gerardo Alminaza said on Monday that the decades-old trees have long provided shade for the public, shielding them from extreme heat and offering respite amid their daily work. Alminaza said the trees play a critical role in mitigating the urban heat island effect, improving air quality, and reducing flood risks in a city already grappling with the harsh realities of the climate crisis. “Now, these trees are being reduced to bleeding stumps to make way for another expressway under the guise of ‘progress,’ thereby flattening our urban environment and, once again, asking the poor to pay the highest price,” he said. Alminaza questioned why “progress” has to jeopardize vulnerable sectors. “Why are our cities designed for vehicles and concrete instead of for children, workers, pedestrians, and the elderly?” he said. The mass tree cutting is not just an environmental issue but a moral failure, a “wound inflicted on our common home” and a glaring example of environmental injustice, Alminaza said. He called for a shift in how development is conceptualized, urging leaders to prioritize projects that enhance life rather than erode it. Alminaza urged a halt to the tree-cutting and a review of infrastructure projects through the lens of ecological justice. He emphasized that such decisions must prioritize the welfare of communities and the environment over corporate gains and vehicle-centric urban planning. Quoting Pope Francis’ encyclical Laudato Si, the bishop warned against a “throwaway culture” that views both nature and vulnerable communities as expendable in the pursuit of profit. Alminaza rallied the faithful to “demand to keep and defend the remaining green spaces of our cities. Demand accountability from our leaders. Demand a development that gives life, rather than one that leaves us in the shadows of stumps.”

On Monday, the DENR said that no trees on Quirino Avenue or at the Berong Nickel Project in Palawan were removed without a legal basis, environmental safeguards, or rehabilitation plans. “We assure the public that no tree is authorized for removal without [a] strict legal basis, environmental safeguards, and long term rehabilitation requirements,” it said in a statement. For the Berong Nickel Project, the DENR has authorized the cutting of 26,617 trees and the earth-balling and transplanting of 43,743 saplings. The DENR, the Berong Nickel Project has “one of the highest mitigation standards in the country.” For every tree approved for cutting, the project proponent must plant 100 indigenous or mangrove seedlings, totaling an estimated minimum of 2.66 million seedlings. The trees must include pagatpat, api-api, and other DENR-approved native species suited for the area’s rehabilitation needs. It said the Palawan project will be implemented in phases, with each phase occurring simultaneously with the planting of replacement trees to guarantee ecological recovery. The project proponent is also required to maintain the planted seedlings for at least three years to guarantee survival, followed by long-term protection and stewardship of the rehabilitated areas. Local families and communities should handle the planting, maintenance, and protection activities. Payments to the community will be released only after the DENR validates their work. The progress in the rehabilitation efforts will be tracked through geo-tagged monitoring reports and supervised by DENR foresters together with a Multipartite Monitoring Team composed of government, local government units, community members, and civil society. The project must also maintain 20-meter buffer zones along all rivers and waterways and rehabilitate any non-minable or protected areas. “These safeguards — similar to the strict conditions imposed [on] Quirino Avenue — ensure transparency, accountability, and long-term ecological recovery,” the DENR said. “We assure the public that the DENR is closely supervising every phase of the activity and enforcing all safeguards. Our priority is to protect communities, uphold the law, and ensure that the environment gains more than it loses. We ask for the public's calm and continued engagement as we carry out our mandate with transparency and care," said the agency.

- What we know and don't know about the emerging deal to end the Iran war (2026-05-25 16:07)

CAIRO — The United States and Iran appear to be closing in on a deal to end the war and open the Strait of Hormuz. U.S. President Donald Trump said Monday that negotiations are “proceeding nicely,” while reiterating his warning that fighting would resume if no deal is reached. It is not clear when or how the deal might be finalized and when its various parts will take effect. Details come from two regional officials and a U.S. official who spoke on condition of anonymity to discuss the sensitive negotiations. An Iranian delegation led by parliament speaker Mohammad Bagher Qalibaf traveled to Qatar on Monday as part of talks, though it wasn't immediately clear what would be discussed. Qalibaf led historic face-to-face talks with Vice President JD Vance in Pakistan last month. Iran's Foreign Ministry spokesman, Esmail Baghaei, said that while understandings have been reached on “a large portion of the issues,” there was still work to be done. “To say that this means an agreement is on the verge of being signed is not something anyone can claim,” he told reporters. Here's what we know and don't know: The war would end. In the 12 weeks since the U.S. and Israel launched the war with attacks that killed Iran's Supreme Leader Ayatollah Ali Khamenei and other top officials, Tehran has insisted that any deal focus on ending the fighting on all fronts. That includes Lebanon, where the Iranian-backed Hezbollah militant group has been fighting Israel since two days into the war. A fragile ceasefire has held since April 7, despite occasional drone and missile attacks on the United Arab Emirates and some exchanges of fire in the Strait of Hormuz. A more permanent truce would allow for global shipping, including an estimated 20% of the world's oil, to begin flowing through the strait again. It also would allow the rebuilding of energy and other infrastructure in the region. Both regional officials said the draft deal includes an end to the war between Israel and Hezbollah, as well as a commitment to not interfere in the domestic affairs of countries in the region. That's a reference to Iran's support for proxies, including Houthi rebels in Yemen, Hamas militants in Gaza and Shiite armed groups in Iraq. The U.S. wants Israel to have a free hand to respond to what they view as threats in Lebanon, while Iran rejects it, one regional official said. The U.S. official said the deal would guarantee Israel's right to act against imminent threats in self-defense. The Strait of Hormuz would reopen gradually. The stated objectives of the U.S. and Israel were to dismantle Iran's nuclear program, curb its missile program and end its support for armed proxies. But Iran's chokehold on the Strait of Hormuz, which was open to international shipping before the war, quickly shot to the top of global concerns as hundreds of ships carrying oil, natural gas, fertilizer and other supplies were stranded, causing a spike in prices far beyond the region. Under the emerging agreement, the strait would gradually reopen in parallel with the U.S. ending the blockade of Iran's ports it imposed on April 17, the regional officials said. The blockade has limited Iran's ability to ship its oil and bring in badly needed cash for its long-suffering economy. The U.S. would allow Iran to sell its oil through sanctions waivers, said one of the officials, who has been briefed on the negotiations. Sanctions relief and the release of billions of dollars in frozen Iranian funds would be negotiated during a 60-day period, the official said. Iran would give up its stockpile of highly enriched uranium. Iran's nuclear program and international concerns over its possible pursuit of a nuclear weapon underlie the tensions. The U.S. and Israel have considered highly complex military operations to go in and take out its highly enriched uranium. Under the potential deal, Tehran would agree to give up that stockpile, according to the regional officials. One official, with direct knowledge of the negotiations, said how Iran would give it up would be subject to further talks over the 60-day period. Some would likely be diluted and the rest transferred to a third country, the official said. Russia has offered to take it. A U.S. official confirmed the 60-day period and said if Iran doesn't give up its stockpile, there will be no sanctions relief. Baghaei, the Iranian spokesperson, said "the focus of the negotiations is on ending the war, and at this stage we are not discussing the details of the nuclear issue." Iran has 440.9 kilograms (972 pounds) of uranium that is enriched up to 60% purity, a short, technical step from weapons-grade levels of 90%, according to the International Atomic Energy Agency. Iran says it has an "inalienable" right to nuclear technology while insisting its program is peaceful. On Sunday, President Masoud Pezeshkian told state TV they were ready "to assure the world that we are not after a nuclear weapon." What appears to be missing "Negotiations with the Islamic Republic of Iran are proceeding nicely!" Trump wrote on social media Monday. "It will only be a Great Deal for all or, no Deal at all — Back to the Battlefield and shooting, but bigger and stronger than ever before — And nobody wants that!" Despite the claims of progress, several issues appear to be unsettled, including whether Iran would be able to enrich uranium and to what level, and the fate of its missile program, which Israel in particular views as a major threat. While the United States and Israel entered the war with the stated hope of seeing Iranians rise up against their government after nationwide protests early in the year, any discussion of leadership change in Tehran appears to be out. As for Iran's past stated aims during negotiations, there appears to be no mention of any withdrawal of U.S. forces from the region, or for reparations for the damage the war has caused.

- Group wants LTO probed over data privacy, national security risks (2026-05-25 16:07)

A CIVIC organization advocating for Philippine data sovereignty has asked the National Privacy Commission (NPC) to investigate the Land Transportation Office (LTO) over alleged security and data privacy concerns involving the agency's driver's license system. In a letter to NPC Commissioner and Chairman Johann Carlos Barcena, a copy of which was obtained by The Manila Times, the Flag Maharlika, alleged that Dermalog, a foreign technology provider LTO previously contracted, has gained access to and control of the agency's driver's license inventory and printing application modules. The group said the LTO's own Management Information Division reportedly concluded in a 2020 report that Dermalog had "access and control" over the modules. The same report allegedly warned that the situation posed a potential national security threat because driver's license cards could be printed beyond the direct control of the Philippine government, it said. Flag Maharlika also cited concerns that certain system functions allegedly required assistance from personnel based outside the Philippines, raising questions regarding cross-border access to sensitive personal information of Filipino motorists. Salvador Piamonte, head of the group's Community Affairs, said the issue goes beyond administrative concerns, stressing that millions of Filipinos may potentially be affected if personal data security safeguards are found inadequate. Piamonte noted that the LTO database contains highly sensitive information, including names, addresses, photographs, biometric identifiers, signatures, government-issued identification numbers, and driver's license classifications. Under the Data Privacy Act, government agencies acting as personal information controllers must implement organizational, physical and technical safeguards to protect personal information from unauthorized access, disclosure, misuse, or transfer. The group also asked the NPC to require public disclosure of entities and individuals with administrative access to the driver's license systems, determine whether cross-border processing or foreign access to Filipino motorists' personal information occurred and recommend appropriate administrative or criminal action should violations be established. It called on the concerned authorities to strengthen safeguards protecting government-held data, emphasizing that issues involving national identification and driver's license systems directly impact public trust, national security, and digital sovereignty. The LTO and Dermalog have yet to issue statements on the group's request before the commission.

- Approaching LPA likely to turn into a storm (2026-05-25 16:06)

THE low-pressure area (LPA) outside the Philippine Area of Responsibility (PAR) could become a tropical depression, the Philippine Atmospheric, Geophysical and Astronomical Services Administration (Pagasa) said on Monday. The LPA was estimated at 1,515 kilometers east of northeastern Mindanao. Pagasa did not say if the LPA would enter PAR, but its trough or extension is already affecting Mindanao and Palawan, bringing cloudiness with scattered rains and thunderstorms. The Bicol Region and Quezon would likely have cloudy to cloudy skies with isolated showers or thunderstorms due to the easterlies — winds that carry warm and humid weather. Metro Manila and the rest of the country would have a similar weather pattern due to the effect of localized thunderstorms in 24 hours.

- Ejercito concerned over difficulty tracking fake recruiters online (2026-05-25 16:05)

SEN. JV Ejercito, on Monday, deplored the difficulties in tracking and prosecuting online illegal recruitment syndicates targeting Filipinos seeking work overseas. Ejercito said online platforms have become a primary tool for syndicates preying on aspiring OFWs, and that such scams are now “very difficult to detect.” Sen. Raffy Tulfo, Committee on Migrant Workers chairman, led the hearing on several bills promoting the welfare of overseas Filipino workers (OFWs). Ejercito asked Department of Migrant Workers (DMW) Secretary Hans Leo Cacdac how existing laws could be strengthened against bogus online job offers proliferating on platforms, such as Facebook and TikTok. “Maybe that's all we can ask so that this can help us formally or amend some laws so that we can strengthen to dismantle recruitment agencies targeting our OFWs,” Ejercito said in English and Filipino. Cacdac said his department has coordinated with digital platforms such as Meta (Facebook) Philippines and TikTok in removing illegal recruitment content. He said concerned authorities still face challenges in identifying and going after the operators behind illegal job offers. “The bigger scourge, I believe, is those who are not licensed by the DMW,” Cacdac said. He said many fake or “dummy” recruitment pages impersonate legitimate agencies, while others are not registered at all. Ejercito asked the DMW about the “common gaps” encountered by authorities in building cases against illegal recruiters. Cacdac said the problem involves “extra-territorial jurisdiction” because some syndicates are based abroad.

- Dupont, Capuozzo returns hand Toulouse Top 14 run-in boost (2026-05-25 16:04)

TOULOUSE, France — France scrum-half Antoine Dupont and Italy full-back Ange Capuozzo have recovered from injuries to help Toulouse's French Top 14 bid, the record 24-time champions announced on Monday. Dupont missed Toulouse's last game, a 38-10 defeat at La Rochelle on May 17, because of a groin niggle while Capuozzo has been sidelined with a shoulder injury since February 22. The bad news for Toulouse, who are chasing a fourth successive Brennus title, is that France back-rower Anthony Jelonek will be out until the end of the season after dislocating his shoulder in mid-April. Dupont, Capuozzo as well as Scotland full-back Blair Kinghorn, who sustained a rib issue against La Rochelle, are set to feature against Lyon on Saturday. Toulouse lead the Top 14 table with two rounds of the regular season to play. They have already booked their place in the play-offs but victory this weekend would send them directly into the semi-finals, to be held in Marseille on the weekend of June 19-20.

- Speaker backs social pension for all senior citizens (2026-05-25 16:04)

SPEAKER Faustino “Bojie” Dy III on Monday showed support for having all senior citizens receive social pension. “I believe that true service starts with listening, understanding, compassion, and love,” Dy said in Filipino before senior citizens' groups, lawmakers, and universal senior citizen social pension supporters at the turnover of over a million signatures supporting such a universal social pension. Currently, the social pension program for senior citizens, which provides P1,000 to those qualified, covers only indigent ones. A bill to make social pension universal is pending at the House Committee on Appropriations. Dy said a universal social pension for senior citizens “is not simply about assistance — it is about dignity, gratitude and compassion.” “Given the costs of medicine, food and health care, our seniors must be provided support to help them afford all of their basic needs,” he said. “Let us always remember: The true measure of a nation is how it cares for its most vulnerable citizens,” Dy said. The turnover of the signatures, which were gathered nationwide, was led by United Senior Citizens Rep. Milagros Aquino-Magsaysay, who is the chairman of the House Committee on Senior Citizens. Aquino-Magsaysay said the group hopes to gather more signatures “until our voices are heard and our signatures turn into law.” She said she has appealed to President Ferdinand Marcos Jr. to support social pension for all senior citizens. Dy assured her the House “will continue to support the right steps that will ease and improve their lives because this is humane and just.”

- House panel changes not linked to vote – impeach trial spokesman (2026-05-25 16:03)

COMMITTEE changes in the House of Representatives were not meant to influence the decision of lawmakers on whether to impeach Vice President Sara Duterte, House Assistant Minority Leader and Kabataan Rep. Renee Co said. "This is not, in our view, connected to voting for or against on a particular issue," Co, one of the House's two impeachment trial spokesmen, said in Filipino and English in an interview on Sunday with DWIZ. The House voted to impeach Duterte on May 11 over the alleged misuse of confidential funds, the amassing of unexplained wealth, bribery and threats to kill President Ferdinand Marcos Jr. and his wife, and former speaker Martin Romualdez. Duterte denies the allegations. The articles of impeachment have been submitted to the Senate, and the trial is expected to start by June. If found guilty of any of the complaints, Duterte will be removed as vice president and faces a lifetime ban from holding any government position.

- Cardinal flays Cayetano for saying drug war was ‘pro-life’ (2026-05-25 16:02)

KALOOKAN Bishop Cardinal Pablo Virgilio David slammed Senate President Alan Peter Cayetano for saying that former president Rodrigo Duterte's war on drugs was a "pro-life campaign." On Facebook Live on Saturday, Cayetano remarked that the "campaign against drugs is a human rights campaign. It's a pro-life campaign, because drugs kill." On a Facebook post Sunday, David questioned whether Cayetano can personally make his remarks to the families of victims of the bloody anti-drug campaign. "I wonder if he can say this straight to the faces of the thousands of women widowed and children orphaned when their loved ones — on mere suspicion of drug involvement and without benefit of due process — were murdered in cold blood," David said. He recalled that many of the victims of the war on drugs were abducted, tortured and left dead in public places. "Countless victims were not simply shot. They were abducted, tortured then dropped dead in the streets, their heads wrapped in plastic bags, sealed with packaging tape around their necks — left to struggle for their last gasp of oxygen until they breathed no more," David said. He said defending or legitimizing extrajudicial killings could have legal consequences under international law, stressing that they could constitute "instigation" or "aiding and abetting" crimes against humanity under Article 25 of the Rome Statute if they embolden perpetrators and create a sense of impunity. "Mr. Cayetano should know that under international law, public statements that frame extrajudicial killings as 'pro-life' — that rehabilitate and legitimize a campaign of murder — do not enjoy the protection of free speech," he said. "Words have consequences. Words have victims. And in international criminal law, words have accountability," David said.

- Pope calls for robust regulation of AI in manifesto that ponders the future of humanity (2026-05-25 16:00)

VATICAN CITY — Pope Leo XIV called Monday for robust regulation of artificial intelligence and for its developers to work for the common good rather than profit, issuing a sweeping manifesto on safeguarding humankind as the technology impacts everything from work to war. "Magnifica Humanitas" (Magnificent Humanity), Leo's first encyclical, has been eagerly awaited ever since history's first U.S.-born pope announced days after his election that he considered AI to be the biggest challenge facing humanity today. In the text, Leo denounced the “culture of power” driving the AI race, especially in developing ever more sophisticated methods of remote warfare. He declared that it was “not permissible” to entrust irreversible, lethal decisions to AI systems, setting up another flash point between the American pope and the Trump administration, which has worked aggressively to deregulate AI development. “Artificial Intelligence now demands to be disarmed, freed from logics that turn it into an instrument of domination, exclusion and death,” the pope told a special Vatican presentation of the encyclical, one of the most authoritative types of teaching documents a pope can issue. Experts in the tech industry, academia and Catholic morality said the document will likely become a benchmark in the debate over AI, a point of reference for policymakers, researchers and ordinary folk alike. It comes as the near-daily developments in the technology trigger concerns over AI replacing human jobs and even human intelligence. Taylor Black, a Microsoft AI executive and director of Catholic University of America’s AI institute, said the document would prompt people “at the forefront of these tools” to ask questions such as “What does it mean to be human?” Pope calls out AI companies even as he hosts Anthropic. The Vatican launch also included remarks by the co-founder of Anthropic, which is currently locked in a legal battle with the Trump administration over access to its AI technology. The Vatican decided to involve Anthropic as part of its decade-long effort to engage Silicon Valley in dialogue over the human cost of AI. And yet in his text, Leo repeatedly blasted the concentration of power and data in the hands of so few people in the private sector as a danger, especially to children and the most vulnerable, and called for external regulation of their work. “It is not enough to invoke ethics in the abstract; robust legal frameworks, independent oversight, informed users and a political system that does not abdicate its responsibility are required,” he wrote. “A more moral AI is not enough if that morality is determined by a few.” Leo appealed to AI developers and political leaders responsible for regulating them to slow down and reflect on what they are doing. He urged them to use ethical and spiritual guidelines to make the choice to work not for their own profit or power, but the betterment of humanity. AI competitors OpenAI and Anthropic are the second- and third-most valuable U.S. private companies, each valued at hundreds of billions of dollars, more than the GDP of many nations. Both companies are heading toward near-trillion dollar IPOs. Anthropic co-founder Christopher Olah welcomed Leo’s criticism and concern. He said such external checks were fundamental to the technology “going well” for humankind since there is so much at stake — “a real possibility that AI will displace human labor at a very large scale.” “We need more of the world — religious communities, civil society, scholars, governments — to do what His Holiness has done here: to take this seriously, to look closely, and to push events in a better direction,” Olah said. “We need moral voices that the incentives cannot bend.” Experts say the text will become a benchmark. In a methodical text, the math major pope traced the history of the Catholic Church’s social teaching and applied its core concepts — justice, solidarity, the dignity of work and the universal destination of resources — to the digital revolution. “I am convinced that this will prove to be a defining document for our era, a profound and prophetic document,” said Paolo Carozza, law professor at Notre Dame Law School and chair of the Meta Oversight Board. “Pope Leo is offering a clear, comprehensive, and coherent voice urging us to take responsibility for constructing a world in which technology will serve humans rather than degrade them,” he said. In its strongest chapters, Leo denounced how AI had helped accelerate the “normalization of war” by desensitizing people to its cost. He didn’t name specific conflicts, but cited “opposing imperialisms, between powers that wish to preserve their supremacy, and those that aspire to seize that supremacy.” He demanded transparency and accountability by AI developers so that the chain of decision-making command in ordering strikes with AI weaponry is always known. He declared that the Catholic Church’s “just war” theory, which provides specific criteria for when force can be justified, was now “outdated” given the technological advances of warfare. A text in the church’s social justice tradition Leo signed the text May 15, the 135th anniversary of the publication of “Rerum Novarum” (Of New Things), the most important teaching document of Leo’s hero and namesake, Pope Leo XIII. That document addressed workers’ rights, the limits of capitalism, and the obligations that states and employers owed workers as the Industrial Revolution was underway. It became the foundation of modern Catholic social thought, and the current pope cited it at the start of his pontificate in relation to the AI revolution, which he believes poses the same existential questions that the Industrial Revolution posed over a century ago. “Magnifica Humanitas” thus becomes the latest chapter in a century-long history of popes adapting “Rerum Novarum” to the social questions of their times, often dwelling on the dignity of work for human flourishing. AI is evoking both existential fears and utopian vision amid an intensifying debate on whether it will become a catalyst that enriches humanity or a technological toxin that dulls human intelligence while wiping out millions of high-paying jobs. “The pursuit of greater profits cannot justify choices that systematically sacrifice jobs, because the human person is an end, not a means, and the economic order must remain subordinate to human dignity and the common good,” Leo wrote. Leo extended his concern for upholding human dignity in labor to issue the first-ever papal apology for the Holy See’s own role in legitimizing slavery by giving European sovereigns explicit authority to subjugate and enslave “infidels.” A decade-long dialogue with Silicon Valley Vatican officials declined to say who contributed to Leo’s encyclical. But Vatican and church officials have been engaged in a dialogue with Silicon Valley tech firms for a decade. The decision to include Anthropic at the Vatican launch was criticized by some who considered it a papal stamp of approval of the AI firm, which is currently suing the Trump administration after it ordered all U.S. agencies to stop using Anthropic’s technology for its refusal to allow the U.S. military unrestricted use of it. Brian Boyd, U.S. faith liaison for the nonprofit Future of Life Institute, read the inclusion of Anthropic’s co-founder Olah as a recognition of its prominence in the field and as similar to a papal audience with a head of state: not an endorsement. Anthropic is an “enormous corporation that is taking onto itself an enormous risk and responsibility,” Boyd said, adding that the company has “demonstrated genuine goodwill and integrity and interest in dialogue.”

- WHO urges DRC's neighbours to act immediately on Ebola (2026-05-25 15:56)

GENEVA, Switzerland — The countries neighbouring the Democratic Republic of Congo are at high risk from Ebola and should act immediately to counter the virus, the World Health Organisation's head said on Monday. "Countries bordering DRC are at especially high risk and should take immediate action," said WHO director-general Tedros Adhanom Ghebreyesus, adding that he would travel on Tuesday to the DRC, the epicentre of the current outbreak of the deadly disease. "The outbreak is spreading rapidly," Tedros told a virtual ministerial meeting on the viral haemorrhagic fever, which spreads through direct contact with bodily fluids. It can cause severe bleeding and organ failure. He said the current outbreak was "especially challenging". "First, the delay in detecting the outbreak means that we are now playing catch-up with a very fast-moving epidemic. We are urgently scaling up operations but at the moment, the epidemic is outpacing us," he said by videolink from Geneva. Secondly, the eastern provinces of the DRC, where the outbreak was first detected on May 15, "are highly insecure, with intensified fighting in recent months (and) there is also significant distrust of outside authorities among the local population". Thirdly, he pointed out, there were "no approved vaccines or therapeutics" for the Bundibugyo strain of Ebola behind the current outbreak. The WHO has recorded 10 confirmed Ebola deaths and 220 suspected deaths in the DRC since May 15. One person is confirmed dead in neighbouring Uganda. Ten African countries are at risk of being affected by the Ebola virus, in addition to the DRC and Uganda, the African Union's health agency, Africa CDC, warned on Saturday.

- Huawei touts new chipmaking technology to sidestep US restrictions (2026-05-25 15:51)

SHANGHAI, China—Chinese tech giant Huawei said on Monday it had developed a new way of making semiconductors that could get around its US-enforced lack of access to the most advanced chipmaking equipment. Huawei has been at the centre of a geopolitical standoff in recent years after Washington warned its equipment could be used by the Chinese government for espionage, an allegation the firm denies. Sanctions since 2019 have cut Huawei's access to components and technologies made by the United States and some of its allies -- including the lithography machines used to make the world's most advanced chips. However, the head of Huawei's semiconductor division He Tingbo said on Monday that the company will be able to produce chips equivalent to next-generation 1.4-nanometre (1.4nm) ones by 2031. Taiwan's TSMC, the industry leader, has projected it will be able to do the same by 2028. Cutting-edge chips that can train and power artificial intelligence systems are a crucial and highly sensitive element of the technology rivalry between the United States and China. The computing power of chips has increased dramatically over the decades as makers cram them with more microscopic electronic components. Huawei's announcement suggests it might have sidestepped the need for extreme ultraviolet lithography (EUV) machines, which have been considered crucial for mass manufacturing chips of 5nm or under. "Over the past six years, I have often been asked... how did you survive and come back on top?" He said in a presentation to the International Symposium on Circuits and Systems (ISCAS) in Shanghai. She said the new technique came about through a shift in how chipmaking has been conceptualised historically. "Moore's Law", a principle developed by Intel co-founder Gordon Moore, states that the number of transistors -- devices regulating the flow of electricity -- on a chip doubles every two years. A higher density of transistors results in a smaller chip or one the same size with faster processing power. He proposed on Monday "the Tau Scaling Law", or "Her's Law", by which instead of optimising for space, designers optimise for the time taken for the various elements making up a chip to communicate. This overcomes a key challenge facing Moore's Law that Intel sums up as: "You can make something smaller and smaller and smaller... until you can't". US sanctions have meant that "these challenges arrived earlier and are tougher" for Huawei, He said. "Our solution is feasible and affordable. The performance of the new chip can fully compete with that of the other path," she said. Huawei's next iteration of its Kirin chip, set to launch in the autumn, will be the first to fully adopt an architecture called "LogicFolding" based on the new principle, the company said. No way out "Over the past six years, there was a period when I felt quite frustrated, as if there was really no way out," He told reporters after the ISCAS presentation. But she said she had been inspired by "a masterpiece of engineering", southwestern China's Dujiangyan irrigation system that was originally constructed around 256 BC. She said she realised she was just facing problems others would come across 10 years later. "I can confidently say in the coming 10 years our solutions for mobile computing and AI computing will be competitive," He told reporters. But she acknowledged that obstacles remained in scaling up -- not least the necessity for new design tools and the challenges of overheating. The Tau Scaling Law "underscores the company's ambition to lead rather than follow in the global chip race", said George Chen, Partner and Chair of Digital Practice at The Asia Group. "Even without a new product launch today, Huawei's intent is clear — and its trajectory will likely heighten US concerns."

- Ombudsman seeks hold order vs Marcoleta, Defensor, 2 others (2026-05-25 15:50)

MANILA, Philippines — The Office of the Ombudsman is seeking a precautionary Hold Departure Order (PHDO) against Sen. Rodante Marcoleta, former lawmaker Michael Defensor and two others. Its Verified Ex Parte Application For the Issuance of a Precautionary Hold Departure Order was filed on Monday before the Sandiganbayan. Ombudsman field investigators filed a complaint against Marcoleta, Defensor, Aristotle Viray, and Joseph Espiritu last May 18, alleging that "Marcoleta's acceptance of gifts with an aggregate amount of P75 Million on three separate occasions constitute the crime of plunder." "Aside from the lack of a clear purpose or pending transaction for which the amounts received may be a consideration, there is no showing that the gifts would still be given were it not for Respondent's position on government. Hence it cannot be denied that the P75 Million was given by Respondents Defensor, Espiritu, and Viray by reason of Respondent Marcoleta's office," the investigators said. Defensor countered that "there was no illegal act, no corrupt transaction, no favor sought, and absolutely no conspiracy to commit any crime." Marcoleta said in a post on Facebook that the complaint was "without evidence of public injury, official favor, corrupt consideration, or abuse of office".

- Rescuers race to reach 7 trapped in a Laos cave after flash floods block exit (2026-05-25 14:53)

BANGKOK — Rescuers are racing against time to reach seven people who have been trapped in a cave in central Laos since last week. A group of villagers in Xaisomboun province went into the cave to look for gold on May 19, but heavy rain triggered flash flooding that blocked the exit, according to Laos and Thai rescue teams involved in the operation. Bounkham Luanglath, who leads the Laos' Rescue Volunteer for People, told The Associated Press on Monday that one of the people from the group escaped before the exit was blocked and alerted authorities. The status of the seven people who are trapped remains unknown. He said the cave is a narrow chamber often visited by villagers searching for gold deposits. He said that authorities had repeatedly warned people against entering the cave out of safety concerns. State-run Lao National Radio reported that Thai rescuers arrived at the site on Sunday for assistance. Divers have since begun navigating flooded sections of the cave toward the area where they believe the group may be trapped. The Laos' Ministry of Foreign Affairs declined to comment. The Southeast Asian nation is a one-party communist state with no organized opposition and the government often keeps a tight lid on information.

- Leaders keep a wary eye on Belarus for any signs it might offer Russia help in Ukraine (2026-05-25 14:50)

KYIV, Ukraine — Belarus' exiled opposition leader visited Kyiv on Monday as the Ukrainian capital cleaned up after Russia's biggest missile attack of the year, and world leaders kept a close eye on how much support the Belarusian government is ready to provide for Moscow's all-out invasion of Ukraine. Russia and its ally Belarus held joint nuclear drills last week, and Ukrainian President Volodymyr Zelenskyy has increasingly warned in recent days that Belarus could provide a launchpad for Russia to open a new front in northern Ukraine. Some Russian troops entered Ukraine from Belarusian territory in Moscow's invasion on Feb. 24, 2022. In a further sign that concerns about any Belarusian role are increasing, French President Emmanuel Macron spoke by phone with Belarusian President Alexander Lukashenko on Sunday about the war in Ukraine, their first call since the invasion began. With that conflict more than four years old, the Russian army is locked in a hard and costly slog on the 1,250-kilometer (780-mile) front line that mostly snakes through eastern and southern Ukraine. "Russia hit a dead-end on the battlefield, so it terrorizes Ukraine with deliberate strikes on city centers," Kaja Kallas, the European Union's foreign policy chief, said in a post on X, in the wake of the weekend barrage that killed two people and damaged buildings across the Ukrainian capital. With American-made air defense missiles in short supply because of the Iran war, Russian missiles are harder for Ukraine to stop. Meanwhile, U.S. efforts to stop the fighting made little progress and have now stalled. Countries keep a wary eye on Belarus. In his call with Lukashenko, Macron "underscored the risks for Belarus of allowing itself to be dragged into Russia's war of aggression in Ukraine," according to a presidential aide in the French leader's office who spoke on condition of anonymity in accordance with the presidential palace's practices. Macron also spoke Sunday with Zelenskyy. Belarusian opposition leader

Sviatlana Tsikhanouskaya, who arrived by train for her first visit to Kyiv on Monday, echoed that France's main goal is to send a warning to Belarus. "Lukashenko's regime knows well what needs to be done to improve ties with the European Union, but it isn't happening, instead hybrid attacks, nuclear blackmail and threats to the entire region continue," Tsikhanouskaya told The Associated Press on Sunday. A terse readout released by the Belarusian presidential press service said that the call took place "on the French side's initiative" and that the two leaders discussed "regional issues" and the relations of Belarus with the European Union and France. Lukashenko, who has governed his country of some 9.5 million people with an iron fist for more than three decades, relies on the Kremlin for cheap energy, loans and other support. Western countries have repeatedly slapped sanctions on Belarus, including for its crackdown on human rights and for allowing Moscow to use its territory to invade Ukraine. More recently, Lukashenko has been trying to improve ties with the West. Since President Donald Trump returned to the White House, Lukashenko has released hundreds of political prisoners as part of deals that lifted some U.S. sanctions. Russia fires hypersonic missile at Ukraine Sunday's heavy bombardment included Russia's powerful hypersonic Oreshnik ballistic missile, which can carry multiple warheads. Russian President Vladimir Putin has boasted it can travel up to 10 times the speed of sound and evade air defense systems. Zelenskyy said Ukrainian intelligence services had received tipoffs from the United States and European countries that Russia was preparing to launch an Oreshnik. In addition to the two deaths, at least 91 people were wounded in Sunday's barrage, according to Tymur Tkachenko, the head of the Kyiv City Administration. The intense assault damaged buildings across the city, including near government offices, residential buildings, schools and a market, Ukrainian authorities said. Shattered glass still littered sidewalks on Monday. Ukrainian Foreign Minister Andrii Sybiha on Monday led ambassadors from more than 70 countries on a visit to the sites of the Kyiv strikes. He urged the international community to step up pressure on Moscow and ensure Ukraine gets more air defense support. "Every such strike only demonstrates yet again the true nature of Putin's regime — the regime that doesn't recognize human life, international law, or borders," Tsikhanouskaya, the Belarusian opposition leader in exile, wrote on Telegram after witnessing the attack's aftermath. In other developments Monday: Russia's Federal Security Service said that divers found magnetic mines attached to the hull of a liquefied petroleum gas tanker in the Russian Baltic port of Ust-Luga. The tanker Arrhenius was bound for Samsun, Turkey, it said, adding that the limpet mines were made in a NATO member country. Ukrainian officials made no immediate comment. Meanwhile, a Russian missile hit a business in the northeastern Ukrainian city of Derhachi, killing two people and wounding 19 others Monday, Kharkiv regional administration head Oleh Syniehubov said. Seventeen people were hospitalized.

- Marcoleta links plunder charges against him to impeachment trial of VP Sara (2026-05-25 14:33)

MANILA, Philippines -- Sen. Rodante Marcoleta hinted that the "trumped-up" plunder charges against him involving alleged undeclared campaign donations were linked to the impeachment trial of Vice President Sara Duterte. Investigators from the Office of the Ombudsman filed a complaint for plunder against Marcoleta, former representative Michael Defensor, and two others. The Ombudsman gave them 15 days to submit their counter-affidavits. The probers said that Marcoleta's acceptance of gifts worth P75 million on three separate occasions when he was a member of the House of Representatives constitutes the crime of plunder. "The trumped-up charges filed against me and some of my friends are not merely legal accusations," Marcoleta said on Monday in a privilege speech. "Whether one favors or opposes any party in those [impeachment] proceedings -- that's not the point. The point is whether the Constitution shall speak above political convenience," he said. The senator said he would perform his duty "with conscience, impartiality, and due regard for the record." He also said the complaint against him was meant to silence him as he was vocal against the apparent failure of concerned agencies to run after the masterminds of the flood control budget mess. "They form part of a deeper and more nefarious design: to intimidate independent voices, to punish dissent, and to warn every senator that the price of asking hard questions could lead to personal damnation," he said. "If the intention of these cases is to silence me, let me say this at the very beginning: it has failed. I will not be silenced. I will answer this complaint in the proper forum, calmly, firmly, and with evidence," he said. Marcoleta added, "Let us not pretend that this came in a vacuum. The pattern is too visible to ignore. First, remove the inconvenient voices from the inquiry. Then weaken those who refuse to conform. Then frighten others into silence and submission before the decisive constitutional battles begin." "When this chamber is called upon to sit in impeachment proceedings, we are not merely politicians. We are senator-judges. We are bound to listen to weigh evidence, to apply Constitution, and to according to our conscience," he said. The responsibility cannot be curtailed by fear, pressure, harassment, or manufactured accusation, Marcoleta said. "No one should be allowed to intimidate a senator-judge into silence. No one should be allowed to punish a member of this chamber for ensuring that impeachment must be governed by law, by evidence, due process, and conscience," he said. "Whether one favors or opposes any party in those proceedings - that's not the point. The point is whether the Constitution shall speak above political convenience. I will perform that duty," he said.

- Muslims begin the annual Hajj in sweltering heat against a backdrop of war concerns
(2026-05-25 14:33)

MECCA, Saudi Arabia — The annual Hajj pilgrimage, one of the Five Pillars of Islam, officially began Monday. More than 1.5 million pilgrims have arrived in Saudi Arabia from outside the country, Saleh bin Saad Al-Murabba, commander of the Hajj passport forces, said Friday. The faithful have been pouring into the country for the Hajj against the backdrop of a tenuous ceasefire in the Iran war and related regional tensions and uncertainty. Egyptian pilgrim Samya Abdul Moneim said she was grateful to God that she made it to the Hajj, which is required once in a lifetime of every Muslim who can afford it and is physically able to make it. "I am in a state of blessing and happiness," she said in Mecca on Sunday. "It's an indescribable feeling, truly. I mean, thank God, I am in a blessing." Typically on the first day, many pilgrims in Mecca converge on a vast tent camp in the nearby desert. Ahead of that, pilgrims have been circling the cube-shaped Kaaba in the Grand Mosque in sweltering temperatures. For pilgrims, Hajj can be a deeply moving spiritual experience and a chance to seek God's forgiveness and the erasure of past sins. Pilgrims perform the Hajj rituals over several days. This Hajj "is, in effect, a hard reset for me," Youssef Chouhoud, a political scientist at Christopher Newport University in Virginia, said Monday from the tent city of Mina. "I pray that I emerge on the other side of this journey with a new sense of purpose and the discipline to see it through." Around him, many pilgrims were resting and refueling, he said via WhatsApp, noting how demanding the pilgrimage is. "It is for many pilgrims the most difficult thing they will ever do in their lives," he said. "But nothing this meaningful is ever going to be easy." He found it inspiring "to see so many who have sacrificed so much to be here ... only to compete with one another in giving charity and helping each other along the way," he said. "All this in the hope that their intentions and actions may be accepted by their Lord." Pilgrims brave intense heat. Many spend years hoping and praying to one day perform the Hajj or saving up money and waiting for a permit to embark on the trip. As they brave the intense heat to perform religious rituals, many pilgrims have been using umbrellas for shade and carrying handheld fans. Volunteers hand out water bottles to help them stay hydrated and fans spray fine mists of water. On Saturday, U.S. President Donald Trump said a deal with Iran on the war, including opening the Strait of Hormuz, has been "largely negotiated" after calls with Israel and other allies in the region. He described it as a "Memorandum of Understanding pertaining to PEACE" that still must be finalized by the United States, Iran and the other countries that participated in the calls. That capped a week in which the U.S. weighed a new round of attacks on Iran. Ahead of the trip for Hajj, some have said they were leaning on their faith as they embark on the journey amid the tensions and that they were feeling immense gratitude for the opportunity to go. Hajj brings together large numbers of Muslims of diverse races, ethnicities, languages and economic classes, creating a sense of unity for many. Regional tensions and Hajj travel plans With uncertainty and global concerns high, authorities in Indonesia, home to the world's largest Muslim population, have in the run-up to the Hajj season emphasized contingency planning for the pilgrimage and issued instructions to ensure that additional travel costs not be passed on to Indonesian pilgrims. In India, home to a large Muslim minority, pilgrimage planning has proceeded largely as normal, but high fuel prices have pushed up travel costs for pilgrims. A reopening of the strait would begin to ease a worldwide energy crisis sparked by the U.S. and Israeli attacks on Iran on Feb. 28, which led Tehran to effectively close the waterway. Prices have spiked for oil, gas and several related products, jolting the world economy. The U.S. has blockaded Iranian ports for over a month, and Trump on Sunday said the blockade "will remain in full force and effect until an agreement is reached, certified, and signed." In response to the U.S.-Israeli attacks, Iran has launched retaliatory strikes and the conflict widened. A fragile ceasefire was reached in April. In Saudi Arabia, pilgrims have been doing the ritual circuit around the Kaaba since arriving in Mecca over recent days. Pilgrims in Mina will camp there and pray and worship. On Tuesday, in what is considered the pinnacle of the pilgrimage, the pilgrims will stand on the plain of Arafat, where they praise God, plead for forgiveness and make supplications. Many carry prayer requests from loved ones and raise their hands in worship with tears streaming down their faces.

- Japan plans \$19 bn extra budget as costs rise with Iran war (2026-05-25 14:22)

TOKYO — Japanese Prime Minister Sanae Takaichi said on Monday the government will compile a $19 billion supplementary budget to support households grappling with soaring everyday costs driven by the Iran war. Takaichi said the budget, which is about 3 trillion yen, will be used to ease the rising cost of petrol, electricity and gas, explaining that "the situation in the Middle East remains uncertain". "With a view to minimising risk, we have drawn up a supplementary budget to ensure we're fully prepared financially," she told reporters, adding the draft would be submitted to parliament possibly next week. Early this month, leading potato chip maker Calbee unveiled a new grey packaging for 14 product lines, swapping its signature orange-and-yellow packets, with local media attributing the move to an ink shortage linked to the Iran war. But Takaichi said the government expected to be able to secure a stable supply of oil until next spring. She added that alternative supplies for naphtha, an oil byproduct used in a wide range of industries, from outside the Middle East have recovered to more than 80 percent of previous levels. Japan's central bank hiked its inflation forecasts last month and cut its growth projections after the Iran war sent oil prices soaring. It said "the rise in crude oil prices is expected to push up prices, mainly of energy and goods, with moves to pass on wage increases to selling prices continuing".

- 'Signs of life' detected under rubble of collapsed building as search for survivors continues (2026-05-25 14:10)

ANGELES CITY, Philippines — Rescuers using thermal scanners pursued a search for survivors on Monday, a day after the collapse of a building under construction that has already claimed four lives, authorities said. More than a dozen people are believed to be still missing after rescuers failed to bring out alive two trapped construction workers who had been found buried beneath the rubble in the northern city of Angeles on Sunday. "We have detected signs of life" among the ruins, Maria Leah Sajiri, the regional spokeswoman for the fire bureau, told reporters. "Rescue operations are ongoing," she added. The rescuers, led by local firemen, said they were using infrared technology to detect human body heat beneath the rubble. Earlier Monday, two workers who were found alive and pinned beneath the wreckage of the nine-storey structure, later died despite rescue efforts. "The first of the two was pulled out alive, but unfortunately, his body gave out and he did not survive. Doctors could not resuscitate him," regional Sajiri told AFP. "The other one suffered a cardiac arrest around 3 a.m. (1900 GMT Sunday). Doctors could not attend to him as he was still pinned down," she added. A Malaysian guest at a nearby hotel damaged by the collapsed building was also killed Sunday, while crews pulled another corpse from the rubble on Monday. It was not immediately clear if the unidentified body belonged to a person listed among the missing, rescuers said in an updated toll. Due to the uncertainty, authorities said approximately 17 other people were still considered missing, mostly construction workers who were sleeping at the building site when disaster struck. Lea Casilao, girlfriend of a missing construction worker, told AFP she had taken a bus from her northern Manila home to Angeles with rice and canned goods for her partner on Sunday, unaware of the pre-dawn accident on the same day. "It's very difficult; it is breaking my heart to wait for something uncertain," 47-year-old Casilao said, crying as she recounted how she slept alone at a local government building overnight Sunday. Lacking safety gear The cause of the collapse is not known. Regional labor department director Geraldine Panlilio said she had briefly shut the project down in September 2024 over violations of occupational safety standards. "Our labor inspectors had monitored poor working conditions, a violation that would put our workers at risk," she said in an interview over Manila radio station DZMM. The construction workers "lacked safety gear" like hardhats, boots, safety belts and lifelines, and worked under poor lighting and with no visible safety signage, she added. Construction resumed a month later after the building contractor complied with requirements, Panlilio said. Officials said up to 70 people were employed at the construction site, though most had gone home for the weekend. Alfredo Albis, 55, told AFP he was asleep at a barracks for workers about five metres (16 feet) from the structure when it gave way. "I have two cousins who are still trapped there. They were working here to earn for their families and (they) are missing," he said, adding "there's a possibility that my relatives are dead." Sajili, the fire bureau spokeswoman, said that "rescue in (a) building collapse is very challenging since any sudden shift triggered by the movements of our rescuers can cause areas to move and people under can get crushed". If no more survivors are found via scanners, earthmoving equipment will be brought in to clear debris and recover bodies, she said, but gave no timeline.

• Taj Mahal, Village People and elephants Rubio's India excursion (2026-05-25 14:06)

AGRA, India — Marco Rubio leads US foreign policy as diplomacy on Iran goes down to the wire, but he is also making time for cultural attractions as divergent as the Taj Mahal and the Village People. Rubio, who serves as President Donald Trump's secretary of state and national security advisor, took a day for sightseeing in India on Monday, touring the Taj Mahal, the renowned monument to love. "It's one of the wonders of the world," Rubio said of the imposing mausoleum in Agra. "I think it's important to show respect to the culture of the countries that you visit." Rubio travelled to the Taj Mahal with his wife Jeanette, who usually shuns the spotlight. He put his arm gently around her as they posed on a bench that featured the iconic shot of Princess Diana in 1992. Jeanette was not the only person to take pictures with Rubio at the Taj. He also posed with members of the Village People, the disco group originally associated with the camp New York gay underground but whose cultural meaning has been transformed entirely by Trump after he adopted their song "YMCA". They flew in to perform Sunday night at a gala party in New Delhi for the 250th anniversary of US independence, where they serenaded Rubio with "Happy Birthday" over a towering four-storey cake. Rubio turns 55 on Thursday. The party was the brainchild of the US ambassador to India, Sergio Gor, a high-octane former aide to Trump, who eagerly joined the Rubios at the Taj Mahal. Crowds were kept 100 metres away, but the Taj Mahal did not go into a full shutdown as it did for Vice President JD Vance. The Rubios, joined by Gor and senior aides, later flew to the desert city of Jaipur, where they took open-windowed jeeps up a ragged road to tour the imposing Amber Fort, the former residence of the Rajput maharajas that stares down on a lake. Rubio was welcomed at the fort by twirling dancers in red turbans pounding drums, to which he gave a fist of approval. After a brief tour, he was welcomed at his hotel, a converted palace, by assembled elephants, white horses and camels as peacocks fluttered in the garden. - Wooing India - The excursion is unusual for Rubio, who in nearly a year and a half on the job has preferred short, business-like trips and rarely done events outside of government meetings. Rubio said he was taking advantage of a one-day break in his schedule before a meeting in New Delhi on Tuesday of the Quad -- Australia, India, Japan and the United States. He will also stop in Armenia on Tuesday on his way home. The hectic pace comes as Rubio comments daily on Iran, predicting chances of an imminent breakthrough. Rubio was not entirely away from Iranian influence at the Taj Mahal, whose domes and four-way charbagh gardens are heavily influenced by Persian architecture. The Taj Mahal was built in the 17th century on orders of Mughal emperor Shah Jahan as a mausoleum for his beloved wife Mumtaz Mahal who died in childbirth. Rubio is visiting four cities over four days in India as he seeks to revive ties with a country successive US administrations saw as a like-minded partner in a world dominated by China's rise. Trump has shaken up that approach since returning to office, temporarily imposing high tariffs, warming to both China and India's historic adversary Pakistan, curbing visas used by Indian professionals, and reposting insulting language about Indian immigrants. In remarks Sunday by speakerphone to the party, Trump insisted he was on board with the relationship, telling the crowd: "We've never been closer to India, and India can count on me 100 percent".

- Self-driving bus in Sweden crashes with tram on first day (2026-05-25 13:58)

STOCKHOLM, Sweden — A self-driving bus was involved in a crash with a tram on its first day carrying passengers in the Swedish city of Gothenburg on Monday, the Vasttrafik public transport company said. The bus has been taken out of service for inspection, Vasttrafik spokesman Patrik Chi told AFP. "The self-driving bus with people onboard in Gothenburg braked and was hit from behind by a tram. There are no casualties or personal damages," he said. The bus had been circulating in central Gothenburg since the end of March, but Monday was its first day carrying passengers. A driver was on board the vehicle to take control if necessary. Sweden's Transportstyrelsen transport agency had given the green light for the bus to have passengers on board for a trial that was to last until July 31, 2027. Self-driving buses and shuttles in Europe operate under local authorisations, granted city by city and route by route, often on private roads. The EU has not yet granted Europe-wide approvals for commercial deployment of self-driving public transport or robotaxis.

- China's Xi meets Pakistan PM Sharif as Iran war mediation drags on (2026-05-25 13:50)

BEIJING — China's leader Xi Jinping met with Pakistan's Prime Minister Shehbaz Sharif in Beijing on Monday, state media reported, as diplomatic efforts by several countries to formally end the Iran war drag on. The high-level meeting, reported by state news agency Xinhua, followed Sharif's talks earlier in the day with Premier Li Qiang, China's number two leader. Pakistan has emerged as a central mediator between the United States and Iran, hosting face-to-face talks last month that failed to yield a lasting agreement. Sharif was accompanied on his trip by army chief Asim Munir, Islamabad's key negotiator between the United States and Iran, Pakistan television showed on Monday. Xi praised Pakistan for "taking the initiative to play a mediating role in restoring peace in the Middle East", according to a Chinese readout of the talks between the two leaders. "Both sides should continue to maintain close communication and coordination (and) jointly oppose unilateralism and Cold War mentality," Xi said. China has played a quieter mediation role, shepherding phone calls and meetings with officials of affected Gulf countries. Sharif, speaking to Chinese leaders alongside Munir, said "the world is passing through a critical moment", Pakistan's state-run PTV channel showed. "Pakistan has played a sincere role to mediate between US and Iran. Field marshal (Munir) was in Tehran and did not want to miss this great visit," Sharif said. "Things are moving in the right direction. I would like to thank China's support to promote peace," he said. Sharif kicked off his four-day official visit in Hangzhou in eastern Zhejiang province on Saturday. It follows a visit by Munir to Tehran on Friday and Saturday alongside Pakistan's Interior Minister Mohsin Naqvi as part of mediation efforts to end the war. China has said it would work with Pakistan to "make positive contributions to the early restoration of peace and stability in the Middle East". In April, Pakistan hosted the only direct negotiations between US and Iranian officials to take place since the war began. Munir was at the centre of the action during that round of talks, greeting both delegations on their arrival and displaying bonhomie with US Vice President JD Vance. But the talks ultimately failed, with Iran accusing the United States of making "excessive demands".

- Pope urges 'disarming' of AI in major manifesto (2026-05-25 13:37)

VATICAN CITY — Pope Leo XIV called Monday for the "disarming" of artificial intelligence in his long-awaited manifesto on the rapidly developing technology, and warned of "new forms of slavery" behind its rise. Leo, the first US pope, warned against "a race for ever more powerful algorithms and larger datasets, driven by the desire to secure geopolitical or commercial dominance". He presented his first encyclical, "Magnifica Humanitas" (Magnificent Humanity) in person at the Vatican, alongside AI experts including Christopher Olah, co-founder of US giant Anthropic. Anthropic is embroiled in a legal battle with the US military after opposing the use of its technology for lethal autonomous warfare and mass surveillance. At the presentation, Olah said AI companies operate "inside a set of incentives and constraints that can sometimes conflict with doing the right thing". He welcomed input from outside actors like the Catholic Church, to "push events in a better direction", saying that "the questions raised by AI are bigger than the AI research community". Leo said he accepted Olah's invitation "to walk together, to listen and to speak and together to find the way for humanity". He had confidence that "together, we can discern the major questions of our time, and so, the future of humanity". The pope said he had listened to scientists, engineers, political leaders, parents and teachers in preparing his manifesto, and had heard "very troubling voices" as well as "the silence of those who have no voice". AI must be "freed from logics that turn it into an instrument of domination, exclusion and death", he said. In his encyclical, Leo sounded the alarm over AI-directed weaponry, saying it was "not permissible to entrust lethal" decisions to tech. Leo has repeatedly clashed with the White House over the Iran war and its use of religion to justify conflict. The "just war" theory -- espoused recently by the Trump administration -- was "outdated", Leo wrote, adding that "no algorithm can make war morally acceptable". - 'Armed competition' -AI could be worth up to $4.8 trillion by 2033, a 25-fold increase in a decade, while concentrating its profits in the hands of a limited few, according to the United Nations. "Disarming AI means freeing it from the mentality of 'armed' competition," the pope wrote. "To disarm does not mean rejecting technology, but preventing it from dominating humanity," Leo wrote. AI should be "human-friendly", accessible to all and opened to discussion and debate, he added. The head of the world's 1.4 billion Catholics has made the hot-button issue a cornerstone of his papacy by dedicating to it his first encyclical -- a document which lays the basis for Church teaching and longer-term debate. The manifesto references a range of cultural giants, from Greek philosopher Plato to Beethoven and his Ninth Symphony, even citing a character from JRR Tolkien's "The Lord of the Rings". - 'Not magical' - "Magnifica Humanitas" was signed on May 15, the 135th anniversary of an 1891 encyclical by Leo XIII which laid the foundations of the Church's social doctrine during the Industrial Revolution. Leo warned of new forms of slavery fuelling the technological revolution, noting "nothing in the world of AI is immaterial or magical". "Every seemingly immediate and flawless response... relies on the silent work of millions of people", from content moderators forced to watch disturbing material, to children who extract the rare earth elements on which AI depends. They are "scarred, injured and worn down so that computational flow may continue uninterrupted", he wrote. Greater efficiency or innovation did not excuse "a chain of exploitation that remains deliberately hidden", he wrote, while more must be done to reduce AI's environmental impact and "protect our common home". He also issued an unprecedented apology for the Vatican's role in the slave trade and in helping to justify slavery, saying it was "a wound in Christian memory". "For this, in the name of the Church, I sincerely ask for pardon," Leo wrote. The release of the text follows several years of study by the Church on AI-related technologies. - Truck overturns in central Bangladesh, killing at least 15 people (2026-05-25 13:29)

DHAKA, Bangladesh — A truck carrying iron rods and extra passengers overturned on a major highway early Monday in central Bangladesh, leaving at least 15 people dead and 10 others injured, police said. The crash happened after the driver lost control around 5 a.m. at Soratoil area in Tangail district, 83 kilometers (52 miles) northwest of the nation's capital, Dhaka, said local police chief Fuad Hossain. Hossain said the truck was carrying hitchhiking passengers and travelling from Dhaka to the northern region as vacationers began traveling ahead of the Islamic festival Eid al-Adha on Thursday. The truck overturned and killed them at the scene, he said. The official said most of the passengers were day laborers and were traveling to join their families for the festival. Witnesses told TV stations that they rushed to the scene after hearing noise and started rescuing passengers who got trapped. Road accidents kill thousands every year in the nation of more than 170 million people because of lax oversight of traffic rules, bad road conditions and unskilled driving.

- Padilla defends staff against allegation she helped dela Rosa 'escape' (2026-05-25 09:10)

MANILA, Philippines — Sen. Robinhood Padilla defended his deputy chief of staff, retired Colonel Jean Robles, from allegations linking her to the escape of Sen. Ronald dela Rosa last week from the Senate despite being under the chamber's "protective custody." The senator on Monday said "any insinuation that she acted improperly or illegally is unfair, speculative, and irresponsible." Padilla on May 14 allegedly helped dela Rosa slip out of the Senate following the issuance of a warrant of arrest by the International Criminal Court (ICC) over the senator's alleged involvement in the drug campaign under the administration of then president Rodrigo Duterte who will face trial before the ICC at The Hague, Netherlands on charges of crimes against humanity "[Retired] Colonel Jean Robles merely performed her official duties as part of my staff during the events that transpired inside the Senate," Padilla said in a statement. "There was no lawful order preventing anyone from leaving the Senate premises at that time. No law enforcement officer stopped, restrained, or prohibited our movements," Padilla said. "Unfortunately, we were held in a lockdown situation inside the Senate premises, and some staff members stayed as part of operational and security coordination," he added. Padilla said that it was about 2:30 a.m. of May 14 when Robles hitched a ride and he brought Robles to her condominium out of concern for her safety. He also dismissed Robles' link to the former president. He said Robles "never personally served" Duterte nor was she part of his personal staff. Padilla said Robles served the Filipino people as an Army officer from 2002 until 2020 before later entering the Department of Foreign Affairs as a foreign service officer. He said Robles "acted professionally, in good faith, and within the scope of her responsibilities as [my] deputy chief of staff."

- Defense, energy, among Marcos' top priorities in Japan state visit (2026-05-25 08:50)

MANILA, Philippines — President Ferdinand Marcos Jr. is expected to push for strengthened collaboration in key areas of interest, among them security and energy resilience, between Manila and Tokyo when he embarks on his state visit to Japan from May 26 to 29, the Department of Foreign Affairs (DFA) said on Monday. Deeper cooperation in the fields of maritime and defense, economy, and "emerging and future oriented sectors" are also in the agenda when Marcos meets with Prime Minister Sanae Takaichi. "The two leaders are also expected to discuss regional and global issues affecting the Philippines and Japan such as Asean (Association of Southeast Asian Nations), challenges in the Indo-Pacific region, and developments in the Middle East," DFA spokesman Analyn Ratonel said in Filipino in a pre-departure briefing in Malacañang. "The two countries are expected to announce new agreements on defense, trade and investment, and human resources. The President is also scheduled to meet with Japanese business groups and members of the Filipino community in Japan," she added. This is Marcos' fourth visit to Japan, and his first state visit. His previous three trips were working and official visits.

- Govt tightens noose on dela Rosa with Interpol red notice application, cancellation of gun licenses (2026-05-25 08:10)

MANILA, Philippines — The government has tightened its noose on Sen. Ronald dela Rosa with the Department of Justice (DOJ) confirming that it has applied for an Interpol red notice to hasten his arrest and its attached agency, the National Bureau of Investigation (NBI), seeking the cancellation of his gun licenses. The International Criminal Court (ICC) has issued a warrant against the senator over alleged crimes against humanity during the Duterte administration's anti-drug campaign. DOJ spokesman Polo Martinez said the request for an Interpol red notice was among the legal remedies available to authorities seeking dela Rosa's arrest. "As far as I know, there is an application for an Interpol red notice," Martinez said. "That is a remedy available to us." An Interpol red notice is a request circulated to law enforcement agencies worldwide to locate and provisionally arrest an individual pending extradition or similar legal action. Once issued, all 195 Interpol member countries may assist in locating and detaining the subject. The development came as authorities continued searching for dela Rosa, who has remained out of public view since May 14. CCTV footage earlier released showed the senator leaving the Senate premises at around 2:30 a.m. aboard a white Toyota van reportedly registered to Sen. Robin Padilla. The incident occurred hours after a shooting incident near the Senate complex. Padilla later confirmed he transported dela Rosa to Makati and dropped him off near Ayala Avenue, where another vehicle allegedly picked up the senator. The National Bureau of Investigation (NBI) has since identified Padilla as a person of interest in the case, although the actor-turned-lawmaker denied any wrongdoing. Justice Secretary Fredrick Vida declared dela Rosa a fugitive from justice and directed both the Philippine National Police and the NBI to enforce the ICC arrest warrant. The warrant covers allegations of crimes against humanity involving murder in connection with at least 32 killings linked to anti-drug operations conducted between July 2016 and April 2018 under the administration of former president Rodrigo Duterte. The Supreme Court on May 20 denied dela Rosa's petition for a temporary restraining order seeking to stop the implementation of the ICC warrant. Voting 9-5-1, the tribunal allowed authorities to proceed with enforcement. The High Court is expected to release its full resolution, including concurring and dissenting opinions, on Monday, May 25. Cancel gun licenses Meanwhile, the NBI has moved to cancel the licenses of more than 100 firearms allegedly registered under dela Rosa's name. NBI Director Melvin Matibag confirmed on Monday that the bureau has sent a letter to the PNP requesting the cancellation of the licenses. Among the firearms reportedly registered under dela Rosa's name were automatic rifles, high-powered firearms, and shotguns. The NBI tagged the senator as "armed and dangerous." The bureau also considers dela Rosa's former role as PNP chief as a "major concern" in ongoing efforts to locate him, citing his familiarity with law enforcement operations. The PNP, through Col. Allen Rae Co, Public Information chief, said it has not received word from the NBI on its request to revoke the firearm licenses registered under dela Rosa. "Upon receipt of such request, we will evaluate and act on the same in accordance with the provisions of Republic Act No. 10591 and its revised IRR [Implementing Rules and Regulation], swiftly and within the bounds of the law," Co said. Dela Rosa, an active gun enthusiast, legally maintains a large collection of firearms. “The Firearms Licence Revocation and Restoration Board under the Civil Security Group shall convene and thereafter determine if any grounds was present,” he added.

MANILA, Philippines — The Metropolitan Manila Development Authority (MMDA) said the implementation of the expanded number coding scheme would be suspended across Metro Manila on Wednesday in observance of Eid’ I Adha or the Feast of Sacrifice. The MMDA said the suspension took effect during regular holidays and special non-working holidays. Under the expanded number coding scheme, vehicles with plate numbers ending in certain digits are barred from major roads in Metro Manila during designated weekday hours. Plate numbers ending in 5 and 6 are not allowed to travel every Wednesday. The agency advised motorists to plan their trips properly to avoid inconvenience, while also reminding drivers to follow traffic rules and observe road safety. Eid’ I Adha is one of the major Islamic holidays observed by Muslims worldwide.

- 2 Pasig City employees suspended as Vico Sotto intensifies anti-corruption crackdown (2026-05-25 05:59)

MANILA, Philippines — Pasig Mayor Vico Sotto on Monday said two city government employees were placed under preventive suspension over alleged solicitation from contractors and fixing activities, as he intensified his anti-corruption campaign to include lower levels of the bureaucracy. Sotto said the suspensions reflected the city’ s continuing effort to change what he described as deeply rooted corruption practices in government that had long been tolerated or considered normal. One of the suspended employees was from the City Social Welfare and Development Office (CSWDO), who was allegedly caught soliciting from a contractor connected to the office. Sotto said practices such as asking contractors for birthday or Christmas party contributions may have been treated casually in government before, but stressed these should not be tolerated, especially when public contracts are involved. “This is something that may have become a habit in government, like it’ s nothing serious, that it’ s not bribery anyway, or the contract was already awarded so maybe it’ s okay to ask for birthday money or Christmas party contributions,” Sotto said. He noted that Pasig City had prohibited contractors from giving contributions to City Hall events and activities shortly after he assumed office in 2019. Another suspended employee from the City Treasurer’ s Department allegedly admitted to acting as a fixer for clients, according to the mayor. Sotto said both employees were only under preventive suspension pending administrative proceedings, adding that the cases would still undergo hearings before authorities determine whether they should face heavier penalties, including dismissal from service. The mayor also revealed that personnel from the city’ s legal department were under investigation, although he declined to provide details because proceedings were ongoing. Sotto linked the suspensions to the broader reform campaign his administration has pursued since 2019, saying efforts initially focused on procurement systems and operations inside City Hall before expanding toward the village level during his third term. He said investigations involving some village officials were also ongoing before the Pasig City Council's Blue Ribbon Committee, with preventive suspensions imposed to prevent possible interference with witnesses or evidence. Without naming specific officials, Sotto pointed to alleged cases involving questionable handling of public funds at the village level, including advance releases of community development funds and reports of funds allegedly being used for personal expenses. "It cannot continue that public funds are handled this way for life," he said. The mayor acknowledged that pursuing administrative cases against government workers and officials could be personally difficult, especially when some involved individuals were known to him, but said reforms would fail if violations continued to be tolerated. He also urged residents to continue reporting irregularities involving public funds while remaining fair in recognizing officials who perform their duties properly.

MANILA, Philippines — The Philippine National Police (PNP) expressed readiness to provide security to the families of the "missing sabungeros" (cockfight enthusiasts) amid reports of alleged pressure and interference from the camp of fugitive gambling lord Charlie "Atong" Ang. Gen. Jose Melencio Nartatez Jr., PNP chief, said the police would not ignore claims that relatives of the missing sabungeros were allegedly asked to skip hearings, stressing that any intimidation or bribery will be investigated. "Police assistance does not end with case build-up and filing of charges. It expands to ensuring that no mockery of the justice system will happen at the course of the legal process," Nartatez said. Relatives of the missing sabungeros trooped to the National Police Commission (Napolcom) to report that the camp of Ang, through his lawyer Caroline Cruz, silenced most of the families of the involved in the case by paying them P40,000 monthly along with regular free travels. The payment, according to a complainant, was in exchange for their non-appearance and eventual dropping of cases against Ang. Once the cases weaken, Ang will show up to express his gratitude through a final payment of P1 million for each family. Napolcom Vice-Chairman and Executive Officer Rafael Calinisan said he was shocked to learn that the missing sabungero cases were falling because of alleged bribery. Cruz admitted that she gave cash to the families of the missing sabungeros but only as a form of assistance.

Both companies said they were pursuing a long-term collaboration aimed at streamlining exhibition logistics and strengthening support services for events held across SMX venues nationwide.

• Mayors' group questions dela Rosa's prolonged Senate absence (2026-05-25 04:43)

MANILA, Philippines — The Mayors for Good Governance on Monday questioned the prolonged absence of Sen. Ronald dela Rosa from Senate sessions, saying ordinary workers will face penalties for the same conduct while still receiving government pay. In a statement issued on Monday, the group said dela Rosa was allegedly absent for about seven months before appearing again on May 14, 2026 to vote in the change of Senate leadership. The organization claimed the senator continued receiving an estimated monthly salary of around P300,000, which it said could already total about P2.1 million during the period of absence. “For Filipino workers, the rule is ‘no work, no pay.’ If an ordinary employee did this, whether in government or the private sector, he would surely face suspension or dismissal from work. Why does the law seem different when powerful officials are involved?” the group said. The group said such alleged neglect of duty was unacceptable for officials being paid by taxpayers while Filipinos continue to face high prices, poverty, and livelihood difficulties. “It is a huge insult to millions of Filipinos who continue striving and enduring hardships just to support themselves and their families,” the statement read. The organization also called on senators not to allow the Senate to become “a refuge for absenteeism and cover-ups,” saying elected officials should not be protected while allegedly avoiding their responsibilities and continuing to receive salaries from public funds. “The lawmakers themselves should lead in following the law, especially the spirit behind why laws were created — for accountability, integrity, and the welfare of the Filipino people,” the group added.

- Manila mayor admits 'problem' after Binondo fire but assures victims of recovery plan (2026-05-25 03:28)

MANILA, Philippines — Manila Mayor Isko Moreno admitted on Monday that his government was faced with the "problem" of helping residents affected by last week's fire of recovering "soon" but assured them that there was "a plan" and hoped to bring some "good news" to the victims. Speaking at the city's weekly flag ceremony, Moreno said the city government was already preparing measures to help "within the day" more than 2,000 displaced residents after the fire that struck Binondo. "The problem now is how they will recover soon. But, again, in our own little way, we have a plan. Hopefully, within a day, we can bring some good news to our fellow Manilenos," said Moreno. In a previous interview, Moreno said the city would provide financial assistance to affected families. The blaze erupted Saturday afternoon at the Parola Compound and escalated to Task Force Charlie before firefighters were able to fully extinguish it after around six hours.

- Philippine construction collapse toll hits three, 17 missing (2026-05-25 03:25)

(UPDATE) ANGELES CITY, Philippines — The death toll rose to three Monday in the collapse of a building under construction near the Philippine capital, with 17 people still believed missing, authorities said. Two workers pinned beneath the wreckage were found alive after the nine-storey structure gave way Sunday, hitting a nearby hotel and killing a Malaysian guest. But the two workers trapped at the site in Angeles, which is north of the capital Manila, died despite rescue efforts. "The first of the two was pulled out alive, but unfortunately, his body gave out and he did not survive. Doctors could not resuscitate him," regional fire bureau spokeswoman Maria Leah Sajili told AFP. "The other one suffered a cardiac arrest around 3 a.m. (1900 GMT Sunday). Doctors could not attend to him as he was still pinned down," she added. Seventeen other people, mostly construction workers who were sleeping at the building site when disaster struck, remained missing, Sajili said. The cause of the collapse is not known. Officials said up to 70 people were employed at the construction site, though most had gone home for the weekend. Alfredo Albis, 55, told AFP he was asleep at a barracks for workers about five meters (16 feet) from the structure when it gave way. "I have two cousins who are still trapped there. They were working here to earn for their families and (they) are missing," he said, adding "there's a possibility that my relatives are dead." Sajili, the fire bureau spokeswoman, said that "rescue in (a) building collapse is very challenging since any sudden shift triggered by the movements of our rescuers can cause areas to move and people under can get crushed". Sudden movements "may also bury our responders," she said, explaining why this phase of the operation had to be done mostly manually. Rescuers will now use thermal scanners "to check if there are possible signs of life," she said. If no more survivors are found, mechanical diggers and other heavy equipment will be brought in to clear debris and recover bodies, she said, but gave no timeline. Meanwhile, the Philippine National Police (PNP) provided assistance to local authorities as well as emergency response units as it investigated the incident. In a statement on Monday, PNP chief Gen. Jose Melencio Nartatez Jr. said the national police force deployed its search and rescue personnel to support the ongoing response efforts. He also instructed local police to set up a first aid and welfare desk to provide victims with medical and psychosocial support. “The PNP… will assist in the conduct of the investigation to determine the circumstances that led to the incident in the interest of truth and accountability. But, for now… the focus is on search and rescue operations,” Nartatez said. “Every second matters in a crisis, and our duty is to act without delay, bringing every available asset to save lives, account for the missing, and support affected families on the ground,” he added. According to Nartatez, Police Regional Office 3 immediately deployed personnel to assist in rescue and retrieval operations, traffic management, and area security. As of 1:52 p.m. on Sunday, a total of 175 PNP personnel are on the ground working alongside the Bureau of Fire Protection, Armed Forces of the Philippines, Angeles City Disaster Risk Reduction and Management Office, and local government units. According to the PNP, rescue operations remain ongoing amid hazardous conditions caused by unstable debris and live power lines. The PNP is likewise supporting the ongoing investigation to determine the cause of the incident and possible violations of safety and building regulations. The public is advised to avoid the area to allow unhampered emergency operations.

MANILA, Philippines — Kalookan Bishop Cardinal Pablo Virgilio David slammed Senate President Alan Peter Cayetano over his remarks, claiming that former president Rodrigo Duterte’s war on drugs campaign was a “pro-life campaign.” In a Facebook post late Sunday, David questioned whether Cayetano could personally say his remarks to the families of victims of the bloody anti-drug campaign. “I wonder if he can say this straight to the faces of the thousands of women widowed and children orphaned when their loved ones—on mere suspicion of drug involvement, and without benefit of due process—were murdered in cold blood,” he said.

The embassy said it was “in close communication with local authorities to monitor the well-being of the citizen who is safe and to verify the status and whereabouts of the remaining national.” “Malaysians requiring immediate consular assistance, or those wishing to provide information regarding other Malaysian nationals who may be in the area are urged to contact the embassy,” it added. - Revelers pack a Hong Kong island for a bun festival, a century-old tradition (2026-05-24 21:37)

HONG KONG — Iconic bun festival drew throngs of revelers to the densely populated city's outlying island, Cheung Chau, to celebrate a century-old tradition that is rooted in prayers for peace and blessings. Residents and tourists braved the heat to watch children in costumes take part in a parade, called “Piu Sik,” which translates as “floating colors.” Children dressed as legendary deities, historic characters or local politicians were carried on stands above the crowds, moving through the island's narrow lanes. The festival highlight is the “bun-scrambling” competition around midnight, where participants climb a tower covered with plastic buns. They have to collect buns, which carry different scores depending on their locations, within a time limit. The one who earns the highest total score wins. But the participant who gets the greatest number of buns in the time allotted will receive the “Full Pockets of Lucky Buns” award. The race was suspended for decades after bun towers collapsed in 1978, injuring dozens of people. The tradition resumed in 2005. According to Hong Kong's Intangible Cultural Heritage Office, legends say Cheung Chau was once devastated by a plague and some residents then invited monks and Taoist priests to set up a sacrificial altar near a temple to pray to deities. They also paraded deity statues along village lanes. After the ritual, the plague ceased and Cheung Chau residents have since been organizing the event, also known as the Cheung Chau Jiao Festival, to dispel disaster and pray for blessings for peace and safety, the office said. The festival has become one of the most popular events for tourists in Hong Kong in recent years. Many people like to buy steamed buns carrying the Chinese characters for “peace” and “safety” or souvenirs modeled on the buns.

- Here are some of China's major coal mining disasters this century (2026-05-24 21:20)

CHINA — A gas explosion at a coal mine in China's northern province of Shanxi, the country's main coal mining province, killed at least 82 people, local officials said Saturday. The cause of the explosion, which took place on Friday evening at the Liushenyu coal mine in the city of Changzhi, is under investigation. With a size larger than Greece and a population of around 34 million, the province's hundreds of thousands of miners dug 1.3 billion metric tons of coal last year — nearly a third of China's total. Mining disasters are common in China, where rapid industrialization came with intense resource exploitation, poor working conditions and a weak regulatory framework. Mine owners and local officials are frequently blamed for putting profits ahead of safety. Underground explosions often are blamed on lack of ventilation equipment to clear gas that seeps from the coal bed. In the past two decades, the Chinese government has been making efforts to reduce mining deaths, by improving safety and closing some smaller mines. Here are some major incidents: 2023: 53 people were killed after a collapse at an open-pit mine in northern China's Inner Mongolia region. 2009: 108 miners died as a result of a gas explosion at the state-run Xinxing mine in Heilongjiang province near the border with Russia. State broadcaster CCTV displayed a diagram showing the miners trapped about a third of a mile underground. Footage showed one entrance was blocked and rescuers in orange suits with breathing equipment attempting to enter through another. 2005: 171 people died in a blast at the Dongfeng coal mine in Qitaihe in Heilongjiang province. 2005: 214 miners were killed following a gas explosion at the Sunjiawan coal mine in the Liaoning province in China's northeast. 2004: 166 died in a gas explosion at the Chenjiashan coal mine in the Shaanxi province, in China's northwest. 2004: 148 people were killed in a gas explosion at the Daping coal mine in China's inland Henan province. 2000: 162 people died after an explosion at the Muchonggou coal mine in the mountainous Guizhou province in China's southwest.

- How Congo is battling an Ebola outbreak complicated by aid cuts, armed rebels and anger (2026-05-24 20:53)

KINSHASA, Congo — Arson attacks on Ebola treatment centers in eastern Congo underscore the serious challenges authorities face — including a backlash in local communities — as they try to stem an outbreak of the infectious disease that has been declared a global health emergency. On Sunday, Congolese authorities said suspected cases have now passed 900 in the east of the country, mainly in Ituri Province, where the ongoing outbreak is centered. The burning last week of the centers in two towns at the heart of the outbreak exposed the anger in a region beset by violence linked to armed rebel groups, the displacement of a large number of people, the failure of local government and international aid cuts that experts say have stripped health facilities in vulnerable communities. “A devastating set of emergencies are converging,” said the Physicians for Human Rights nonprofit. Here's a look at the longstanding crises in eastern Congo that have made it home to one of the world's worst humanitarian disasters, and how they are now affecting the response to a rare type of Ebola: The region is constantly threatened by violence. Eastern Congo has for years seen attacks by dozens of separate rebel and militant groups, some of them with links to foreign countries or the extremist Islamic State group. The Rwanda-backed M23 rebels are in control of parts of the region. While the Congolese government still largely controls the northeastern Ituri Province, the epicenter of the Ebola outbreak, that control is tenuous. The Allied Democratic Forces, a Ugandan Islamist group linked to IS, is one of the dominant rebel groups there and responsible for violent attacks against civilian targets. Before the outbreak, Doctors Without Borders said in an assessment that the insecurity in Ituri had worsened recently, causing doctors and nurses to flee and leaving overwhelmed health facilities and in some parts, “catastrophic conditions.” Ebola cases soar in Ituri, where nearly a million people are displaced. The U.N. humanitarian office says almost a million people have been displaced from their homes by conflict in Ituri. That means this Ebola outbreak is “unfolding in communities already facing insecurity, displacement and fragile health care systems,” said Gabriela Arenas, a regional coordinator at the International Federation of Red Cross and Red Crescent Societies. There are concerns the disease might spread to the large displacement camps near the city of Bunia, where the first cases were reported. The Congolese Ministry of Communication, in a post to X on Sunday, said that there were 904 suspected cases and 119 suspected deaths, mostly in Ituri. That was a significant jump from the previously announced more than 700 suspected Ebola cases, though suspected deaths were revised down from more than 170 announced earlier. The change in the number of fatalities could not immediately be explained. Cases have also been reported in two other eastern provinces, North Kivu and South Kivu, where the M23 rebels are in control, and also in the neighboring country of Uganda. As a result, the outbreak in Congo is being managed by the government and in part by rebel authorities, with an array of aid agencies also helping. Aid cuts were devastating for eastern Congo. Health experts say international aid cuts last year by the United States and other rich nations were devastating for eastern Congo because of its multiple problems. The cuts “reduced the capacity to detect and respond to infectious disease outbreaks,” said Thomas McHale, public health director at Physicians for Human Rights. Congo has had more than a dozen previous Ebola outbreaks. Aid groups fighting this outbreak on the ground say they don’t have the equipment they need, such as face shields and suits to protect health workers from infection, testing kits, and body bags and other materials needed to safely bury the bodies of victims, which can be highly contagious. “We have made requests to different partners, but we have not yet really received anything,” said Julienne Lusenge, president of Women’s Solidarity for Inclusive Peace and Development, an aid group operating a small hospital near Bunia. “We only have hand sanitizer and a few masks for the nurses,” she said. The Bundibugyo type of Ebola virus responsible for the outbreak has no approved vaccine or treatment. Health and aid workers also face anger from local communities. The burning of treatment centers in the Rwampara and Mongbwalu areas — which have the highest Ebola case counts — show how a backlash in some communities is further complicating the response. Colin Thomas-Jensen, director of impact at the Aurora Humanitarian Initiative, said the attacks may reflect the “built-in skepticism and anger” of people in eastern Congo over how the region has been treated, with years of violence from foreign-linked rebel groups and a failure of their government and international peacekeepers to protect them, he said. Another source of anger has been the strict protocols around the burial of suspected victims of Ebola, which authorities are taking charge of wherever they can to prevent further spread of the disease in traditional burials — when families prepare the bodies and people gather for a funeral. The first burning of an Ebola center in Rwampara was by a group of local young men trying to retrieve a friend’s body, according to witnesses and police. The witnesses said the crowd accused the foreign aid group operating there of lying about Ebola. Authorities in northeastern Congo have now banned funeral wakes and gatherings of more than 50 people, and armed soldiers and police are guarding some burials carried out by aid workers. Imray reported from Cape Town, South Africa. Associated Press writers Mark Banchereau and Wilson McMakin in Dakar, Senegal, contributed to this report.

QUETTA, Pakistan — A suicide bomber detonated an explosives-laden vehicle near a railway track as a passenger train passed through the southwestern Pakistani city of Quetta on Sunday, killing at least 23 people and wounding over 70 others, officials said. The force of the explosion caused two of the train cars to overturn and catch fire, sending thick black smoke into the air, according to footage shared online. The attack happened in an area where security forces are usually stationed, badly damaging several nearby buildings and smashing more than a dozen vehicles parked along the road, according to witnesses and images circulating on social media. Doctors at local hospitals said they had received the wounded, with 20 in critical condition. Three security officials told The Associated Press the bodies were transported to hospitals following the attack. The officials spoke on condition of anonymity to be able to speak to the media. The outlawed Baloch Liberation Army, or BLA, which demands independence from Pakistan's central government, has claimed responsibility for the attack in a statement sent to reporters. The militant group said it targeted a train carrying security personnel. Quetta is the capital of insurgency-hit Balochistan province. The oil- and mineral-rich region has long been the scene of a low-level insurgency. The insurgents have frequently targeted security forces, government installations and civilians in the province and elsewhere in the country. "We strongly condemn the targeting of innocent civilians and are deeply saddened by the loss of precious human lives. Terrorist elements deserve no leniency," said Shahid Rind, Balochistan provincial government spokesman. He said following the explosion, a medical emergency was declared at hospitals in Quetta, and an investigation has been launched. Prime Minister Shehbaz Sharif strongly condemned the attack, calling it a "cowardly act of terrorism" in a post on X and offering condolences to the families of the victims. Balochistan Chief Minister Sarfraz Bugti strongly condemned the attack in Quetta, saying the militants targeted "innocent civilians, including women and children," vowing to "hunt (them down)" in a post on X. Bugti and the federal government in Islamabad often use the phrase "Fitna al-Hindustan" to refer to the BLA, which they allege is backed by India. New Delhi denies the allegation. Pakistan's President Asif Ali Zardari denounced the bombing, saying militants and their backers sought to undermine Pakistan's role in regional and international peace efforts. The attack came a day after Pakistan said the United States and Iran were close to reaching a memorandum of understanding to end the war in the Middle East that began on Feb. 28 after the U.S. and Israel attacked the Islamic Republic, upending global travel and spiking oil prices. U.S. President Donald Trump had said a deal related to the conflict had been "largely negotiated" following calls with regional allies, including Pakistan. Zardari promised in a statement that his country "will defeat terrorists, their facilitators, financiers and those providing them safe havens." Pakistan and India have long had strained relations and have fought two of their three wars over Kashmir, which is claimed by both in its entirety. Although Pakistani authorities say they have quelled the insurgency, violence in Baluchistan has persisted. At least 26 people, including soldiers, were killed in 2024 when a suicide bomber attacked a train station in Balochistan.

JIUQUAN — China launched the Shenzhou 23 spacecraft Sunday night with three astronauts heading to its space station, including one set to stay in space for a year. The spacecraft blasted off from the Jiuquan Satellite Launch Center in northwestern China. The much-anticipated launch comes as China prepares for its first crewed lunar landing by 2030. The astronauts on the mission are Zhu Yangzhu, the commander, Zhang Zhiyuan and Lai Ka-ying, also identified by Chinese authorities as Li Jiaying using the Mandarin transliteration of her name. Lai, who was born and raised in Hong Kong and has a doctoral degree in computer forensics, is the first astronaut from the city on a space mission. The crew is set to conduct dozens of science and application projects, state media said. They are also expected to complete an in-orbit rotation with the crew of Shenzhou 21, who has been at the Tiangong space station for more than 200 days. One of the three astronauts on the Shenzhou 23 mission is scheduled to stay at the orbiting space station for a year in what would be among the world's longest single stays in space. The astronaut's mission is to "explore human adaptability and performance limits" in long-duration spaceflight environments, state media reported. As China steps up its space program, its astronauts have carried out multiple missions to the Tiangong space station, developed after China was effectively excluded from the International Space Station on U.S. concerns over national security. The U.S. is seen as China's top space rival, with NASA aiming to land astronauts on the lunar surface in 2028. China's space station Tiangong, which translates to "Heavenly Palace," first hosted the country's crew in 2021. Last year, an emergency mission in the Shenzhou program, which means "Divine Vessel," returned a team of astronauts stranded on the space station due to a damaged spacecraft.

- Norway-set drama about political polarization 'Fjord' wins Palme d' Or at Cannes
(2026-05-24 18:56)

FRANCE — Cristian Mungiu's Norway-set drama about political polarization, "Fjord," has won the Palme d' Or, handing the Cannes Film Festival's top honor for the second time to Mungiu, the Romanian director of "4 Months, 3 Weeks and 2 Days." At a 79th Cannes Film Festival that saw few films cause a stir, "Fjord" found wide admiration for its engrossing tale of what Mungiu called "left-wing fundamentalism." It stars Sebastian Stan and Renate Reinsve as Romanian Evangelicals who move to Norway, but soon after have their children taken from them by child services for spanking them. "Today the society is split. It's divided. It's radicalized," said Mungiu. "This film is a pledge against any type of fundamentalism. It's a pledge for these things we quote very often, like trauma and inclusion and empathy. These are lovely words but we need to apply them more often." Mungiu becomes just the 10th filmmaker to win the Palme d' Or twice. His "4 Months, 3 Weeks and 2 Days," a Romanian abortion drama, won the award in 2007. The win for "Fjord" extends one of the movies' most extraordinary streaks. Neon, the specialty label, has now taken seven Palme d' Or winners in a row. "Fjord" adds to its unparalleled run, including last year's champion, Jafar Panahi's "It Was Just an Accident," and the 2024 winner, "Anora." The latter went on to win best picture at the Oscars. ‘Minotaur’ wins Grand PrixThe Grand Prix, or second prize, went to “Minotaur,” Andrey Zvyagintsev’s domestic thriller set against Russia’s war with Ukraine. Loosely based on Claude Chabrol’s 1969 film “The Unfaithful Wife,” “Minotaur” is about a Russian businessman suspicious of his wife’s indiscretions. At the same time, he’s tasked with conscripting 150 of his workers for Vladimir Putin’s war machine. “The only person who can stop this butchery is you, Mr. President of the Russian Federation,” Zvyagintsev said, accepting his award. “Put an end to this slaughter. The whole world is waiting for this.” By wide consensus, it wasn’t a banner festival. Hollywood largely sat out this year’s edition. Many of the selections struggled to bowl over critics. The global buzz that Cannes typically generates was fitful at best. But the awards handed out Saturday as the 79th Cannes drew to a close will significantly raise the international profiles of the winners. Last year’s Cannes produced a long string of Oscar nominees, including “Sentimental Value” and “The Secret Agent.” The nine-member jury that decided the awards was headed by Korean filmmaker Park Chan-wook. Demi Moore, Chloé Zhao and Stellan Skarsgård were also jurors. Chan-wook, a Cannes regular including last year with his satirical thriller “No Other Choice,” joked that he preferred not to give away the Palme. “To be honest, I didn’t want to award the Palme d’Or to any of the films, because it’s an award I myself have never gotten,” Chan-wook told reporters after the ceremony. “But I had no other choice.” Awards are split and sharedTwo films won for best director: the Polish filmmaker Pawel Pawlikowski, for his postwar drama “Fatherland,” and the Spanish creative duo Javier Ambrossi and Javier Calvo for “The Black Ball,” a generation-spanning queer epic “The Black Ball.” It was Pawlikowski’s second time winning the same Cannes prize in as many films, following his “Cold War” in 2018. But the award marked a breakthrough for Ambrossi and Calvo in their first Cannes entry. “No one knew us. Thierry didn’t know us,” Ambrossi told reporters, referring to Thierry Fremaux, Cannes artistic director. “It was just that the movie spoke.” Virginie Efira and Tao Okamoto, the two stars of Ryusuke Hamaguchi’s “All of a Sudden” shared the best actress award. In the elegantly empathetic drama, the two play women brought together in friendship out of their mutual sense of care for others. The jury also split the best actor prize. They chose Emmanuel Macchia and Valentin Campagne, the two stars of “Coward,” Lukas Dhont’s drama about young Belgian men sent to the front lines of World War II. The prize for best screenplay was awarded to Emmanuel Marre for “A Man of His Time,” a French drama about a Nazi collaborator in Vichy France. Marre based it on the experiences of his own great-grandfather. The jury prize, or third place, went to German filmmaker Valeska Grisebach’s “The Dreamed Adventure,” a crime drama set in a Bulgarian border town. Saturday’s ceremony was missing its tribute honoree. Barbra Streisand was to receive an honorary Palme d’Or, but a knee injury prevented her from attending. Isabelle Huppert nevertheless celebrated Streisand during the ceremony, and Streisand appeared in a taped video message. The Camera d’Or, Cannes’ award for best first film, went to Marie Clémentine Dusabejambo’s post-genocide drama “Ben’ Imana,” the first Rwandan film to be officially selected for the festival.

- 40,000 people under evacuation orders for a chemical tank leak in Southern California
(2026-05-24 17:42)

Authorities in Southern California on Friday were racing to figure out how to prevent the explosion of a storage tank that has been leaking a hazardous chemical used to make plastic parts, as some 40,000 people were under evacuation orders in the area. A storage tank holding between 6,000 and 7,000 gallons (22,700 and 26,500 liters) of methyl methacrylate overheated Thursday and began venting vapors into the air at an aerospace plastics facility in Garden Grove, a city in Orange County, the local fire authority said. The tank could fail and crack, releasing the chemical onto the ground, or it could explode, Orange County Fire Authority Division Chief Craig Covey said Friday. “This thing is going to fail, and we don’t know when,” Covey said. “We’re doing our best to figure out when or how we can prevent it.” Officials ordered residents in Garden Grove to leave and expanded evacuation orders Friday to some residents of five other Orange County cities — Cypress, Stanton, Anaheim, Buena Park and Westminster — after being unable to stop the leak overnight on the tank at GKN Aerospace, which makes parts for commercial and military aircraft. No injuries or deaths have been reported, authorities said. In an update later Friday, Covey said authorities have been able to maintain the tank’s temperature, buying time to figure out how to fix it. Garden Grove is about 38 miles (61 kilometers) south of downtown Los Angeles and next to Anaheim, home to Disneyland’s two theme parks, which were not under evacuation orders Friday. Danny Pham said he was deep in a dream when his roommate banged on his door around 7 a.m. Friday morning and told him he needed to leave immediately. Pham had been working late the night before at a Vietnamese restaurant and had not seen the news. “It was shocking to me,” said Pham, who lives only a couple blocks from the plastics plant. “I didn’t know how serious it would be. I never knew that a thing like this could happen.” He left minutes later, grabbing only his wallet and passport, and took shelter at a friend’s restaurant in a neighboring city. By late Friday afternoon, Pham was still trying to figure out where he would stay the night and worrying that he had only the clothes on his back, possibly for days to come. Covey said crews have created containment barriers with sandbags in case there is a chemical spill from the tank to prevent the toxic chemical from getting into storm drains or reaching creeks or the nearby ocean. Dr. Regina Chinsio-Kwong, the county health officer, said if the chemical heats up, it can release a vapor that is harmful to people’s health. It can cause respiratory issues, itching and burning eyes, nausea and headaches. Crews were initially successful and were able to neutralize one of two damaged tanks, but Covey said they determined Friday morning that the remaining tank was “in the biggest crisis.” GKN Aerospace said specialized hazardous material teams are assessing the situation. “There are no reports of injuries at this time and our priority remains the safety of our employees, responders, and the surrounding community,” a spokesperson said in an emailed statement. “We will provide verified updates as soon as more information becomes available.” Kim Yen, a retiree in Garden Grove, was settling in for the night Thursday when she heard a sirenlike sound coming from her phone. An alert told her she needed to leave her home, which was just two blocks from the chemical leak. As Yen drove to her daughter’s house in Seal Beach, she worried that others in the local Vietnamese community might ignore or not understand the evacuation alert because it was in English. “They are family,” she said. “I’m hoping they stay alert and listen to the news and the authorities. This is scary.” Yen, who is originally from Vietnam and has lived in Orange County since 1980, quickly stopped by her house Friday morning to grab important documents and medications. By then her neighborhood was “a ghost town,” and she was comforted to see police officers going door to door to make sure everyone had evacuated. “We understand that this is frightening,” Garden Grove Mayor Stephanie Klopfenstein said. “But the evacuation orders are in place for your safety.” Local Vietnamese television stations translated updates from officials and urged residents to take the situation seriously.

- Senate minority says choice of Gatchalian non-negotiable (2026-05-24 16:14)

THE Senate minority bloc’s quest to install Sen. Win Gatchalian as the new Senate president is “non-negotiable,” Sen. Panfilo Lacson said on Sunday. “Insofar as we are concerned, [installing] Senator Win as SP (Senate president) is non-negotiable,” Lacson said in Filipino and English during a radio interview. “With regard to who might join [us], I don’t want to go there. We will not accept any SP other than Senator Win,” he said. Lacson refused to say whether Gatchalian will openly challenge Sen. Alan Peter Cayetano as Senate head when sessions resume on Monday. Reports were circulating that Sen. Chiz Escudero, who helped Cayetano oust Sen. Vicente Sotto III as Senate president on May 11, was trying to form a separate group to wrest the chamber’s leadership. Asked if there are negotiations for a counter-coup against Cayetano, Lacson replied, “If there’s any, I’m not at liberty to disclose because that’s a critical issue.” “That’s a sensitive matter. I won’t confirm nor deny [such move]. The quest to remove the SP is a continuing crime,” Lacson said. Cayetano is in a precarious position as the majority bloc to which he belongs is now down to 12 members, with Sen. Ronald dela Rosa having gone into hiding to elude arrest. In contrast, the 11-member minority bloc is still strong and has promised “not to abandon each other,” Lacson said. “I was asked why I have been silent regarding Senate leadership. Wrong! I was the one who brought out the idea of making Sherwin (Gatchalian) as SP (Senate President),” Sotto said in a text message on Sunday. Lacson dismissed speculations that the minority’s move is linked to efforts to amend the Constitution or influence the impeachment trial of Vice President Sara Duterte. “Our primary or main concern is to restore the Senate’s integrity. We never discussed anything else — not Con-ass, not the impeachment trial of Vice President Sara Duterte,” he said. “We in the minority bloc agreed that our reason for seeking a leadership change is to give the Senate a fresh start. That is why we rally behind Senator Sherwin Gatchalian; he is a fresh face and has no ‘enemies’ among senators,” he said. Aside from Lacson, Sotto and Gatchalian, the other members of the minority group are Senators Bam Aquino, JV Ejercito, Risa Hontiveros, Lito Lapid, Kiko Pangilinan, Erwin Tulfo, Raffy Tulfo, and Migz Zubiri. Lacson said he saw some “redeeming value” for Cayetano when he convened the impeachment court that will try Vice President Sara Duterte. “I saw that he can defy any pressure not to convene [the Senate as impeachment court],” Lacson said. “I mentioned before that the immediate convening of the Senate as impeachment court by SP (Cayetano) was a breath of fresh air,” Lacson said. Lacson also said the minority bloc will oppose the motion of Sen. Rodante Marcoleta to allow dela Rosa to vote “virtually” on any Senate bills to be approved on third and final reading or on any crucial Senate matters. On Sunday, the spokesman for the House of Representatives’ prosecution panel for the trial of Duterte said it is up to the Senate to settle the leadership issue. “For us, whatever the composition of the Senate will be, regarding the positions or leadership... we are not substantially considering this because, for us, what we are standing by are the pieces of evidence that we can present,” Lanao del Sur 1st District Rep. Zia Alonto Adiong said in an interview with DZBB. “So we leave it to the Senate because this is internal to them and whatever their decision will be, we respect it on our part,” Adiong said. “Should there be changes in the Senate leadership, there will be no changes in the evidence that the House prosecution panel can present,” Adiong said. The prosecution team is made up of Batangas 2nd District Rep. Gerville Luistro, Bicol Saro Rep. Terry Ridon, 1-Rider Rep. Ramon Rodrigo Gutierrez, San Juan City Rep. Ysabel Maria Zamora, Iloilo 3rd District Rep. Lorenz Defensor, Akbayan Rep. Jose Manuel Diokno, Mamamayang Liberal Rep. Leila de Lima, Dinagat Islands Rep. Kaka Bag-ao, Bukidnon 2nd District Rep. Jonathan Keith Flores, Cagayan de Oro 1st District Rep. Lordan Suan, and Manila 3rd District Rep. Joel Chua. On May 11, the House, voting 257-25 with nine abstentions, impeached Duterte over alleged misuse of confidential funds, unexplained wealth allegedly amassed, alleged bribery, and the kill remark against President Ferdinand Marcos Jr. The House sent the four articles of impeachment to the Senate three days later. Article 1 accuses Duterte of graft and corruption, and betraying public trust “through the systematic misuse, misappropriation, and irregular liquidation of confidential funds amounting to” P500 million “released to the Office of the Vice President and” P112.5 million “released to the Department of Education.” Duterte served as education secretary before she resigned from the post in 2024. Article 2 accuses the vice president of lying about her and her husband’s assets, liabilities, and net worth and failing to divest and, instead, willfully continuing all her business interests during her tenure as vice president. Article 3 alleged that she gave monetary gifts or payments to “certain people to induce the violation and circumvention of procurement and other related laws.” Article 4 accuses Duterte of hiring an assassin to kill President Ferdinand Marcos Jr., first lady Liza Araneta-Marcos, and former speaker Ferdinand Martin Romualdez and “actively inciting sedition against the republic.”

- Building under construction in Angeles collapses; 19 feared trapped (2026-05-24 16:12)

RESCUERS used their hands and sniffer dogs to search for 19 people who are feared trapped after a building under construction in Angeles City collapsed early on Sunday. The building collapsed on itself while also heavily damaging an adjacent hotel where two of the 26 people who were rescued had been staying, they said. Local delivery rider James Bernardo, 30, told AFP by telephone he had just dropped off food on the same street when the disaster occurred. “A few seconds later, there was suddenly a loud noise in the area, and when I looked, I realized that (the building) had already collapsed,” Bernardo said. A video clip taken by Bernardo and verified by AFP showed a giant pile of twisted steel beams, power pylons and slabs of concrete blocking the street as fellow witnesses took photographs with their phones. In the clip, Bernardo can be heard saying, "We thought it was an earthquake, but it turned out it was the building (collapsing)." Angeles City information officer Jay Pelayo told AFP the nine-story building's walls and scaffolding had buckled, likely trapping people in a pile of debris. While there were no initial reports of casualties, "there are 19 personnel that usually report in the area, so they are the ones we are trying to locate now," Pelayo said. "There are big chunks of concrete, and we need equipment to lift them up. That is what's challenging for the rescue right now." Initial reports suggested 24 people had been rescued from the rubble, as well as two from a hotel that was also hit when the building came down, the city government said. "We hope the 19 people are part of that number" and therefore accounted for, Pelayo said. Firefighters, police and disaster-response teams used their hands and sniffer dogs to search for the trapped survivors, Public Works Secretary Vinzon Dizon told reporters. "There are some signs of life ... There are voices that are being heard," Dizon said, adding that rescuers were moving with extreme caution. "It's a very, very unstable site, and the priority is to get the people out." Rescuers were "hearing voices" in the rubble, while 24 workers managed to dash to safety or were rescued, police and other officials said. The building collapsed after a fierce thunderstorm. Among the 21 people who remained unaccounted for, most were believed to be workers at the building, according to Francis Pangilinan, who heads Angeles City's disaster mitigation office and was at the scene. Two other people, including a Malaysian tourist, were injured when their lodgings were hit by debris from the collapsed building, officials said. The incident ignited fierce online debate over the building's structural integrity, after street-level photos appeared to show columns far too slender for such a tall edifice. The building is owned by a certain Ernest Jackson Lim. Netizens and construction watchers began scrutinizing Google Maps Street View captures of the project during its early phases. "The columns visible in those photos can only support up to a four-story building," several online commentators said. The Metropolitan Manila Development Authority (MMDA) sent K9 teams to help search for victims who could still be trapped under the rubble.

AHEAD of her campaign in the French Open, Alex Eala received a birthday cake from her tennis buddies, which included Iva Jovic, whom she will face in the tournament's first round. Eala, who turned 21 on May 23, was presented the cake by Jovic, Eva Lys of Germany, and Zeynep Sonmez of Turkey after a practice round. "21 can you do sum (some) for meeeee," Eala posted on social media. The Filipina tennis sensation also had a simple birthday dinner with her family, with the iconic Eiffel Tower as the backdrop. With no exact match time announced, anticipation builds for what will be the first-ever singles match between Eala and Jovic, the 17th-seeded American. Earlier this year, the two teamed up in doubles at the ASB Classic in Auckland, New Zealand, reaching the semifinals before falling to the third-seeded Chinese pair Xu Yi Fan and Yang Zhao Xuan. At Roland Garros, Eala will partner up in the women's doubles with world No. 9 Victoria Mboko of Canada. They will go up against Leylah Fernandez of Canada and Diana Shnaider of Russia in the first round. Messages of support for Eala poured in from across the tennis world and beyond, including from fellow Filipina and Olympic gold medalist Hidilyn Diaz. Reigning French Open champion Coco Gauff of US and Philippine Women's Open titlist Camila Osorio of Colombia also commented on Eala's post.

- Defensor: Plunder case 'completely baseless' (2026-05-24 16:10)

FORMER lawmaker and environment and natural resources secretary Michael "Mike" Defensor on Sunday railed at the timing of the filing of a complaint of plunder against him, Sen. Rodante Marcoleta and two other people, saying "it was completely baseless and appears to be built on assumptions and speculation." Defensor told The Manila Times in a Viber interview that he and the other respondents are "prepared to fully defend ourselves." "I have faith in our institutions and in the rule of law. I trust that when facts — not politics, assumptions, or publicity — are examined, the truth will prevail," said Defensor, who was Malacañang chief of staff during the term of president Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo. "I have faced many battles in public life before. We will face this one head-on, and we will let the evidence speak," he said. The nephew of the late senator Miriam Defensor-Santiago said he did not commit any wrongdoing. "There was no illegal act, no corrupt transaction, no favor sought, and absolutely no conspiracy to commit any crime," he said. The mere act of giving or receiving funds does not automatically constitute plunder, bribery, or corruption, said Defensor. The law requires facts and evidence — not insinuations. "What is disturbing is the reckless effort to elevate ordinary and lawful acts into serious criminal accusations without showing any clear connection to a government contract, official act, undue benefit, or quid pro quo. Serious charges like plunder should never be used for headlines or harassment," he said. "The timing and manner by which this has surfaced naturally raise questions. But regardless of motive, we will confront this directly and through the proper legal process," according to Defensor, who recently made news when he introduced to Marcoleta former Marine Sgt. Orly Guteza — who became a surprise whistleblower at the height of the Senate inquiry into the flood control project scandal. The Office of the Ombudsman gave the respondents 15 days from receipt of its order to submit their counter-affidavits. The complaint, filed last May 18, alleged that Marcoleta's acceptance of gifts worth a total of P75 million on three separate occasions when he was a member of the House of Representatives constitutes the crime of plunder. It alleged that on Jan. 6, 2025, Marcoleta received P30 million from Defensor, which was "evidenced by a donor's tax return and a ... deposit slip showing that Defensor paid the donor's tax on" Dec. 17, 2025.

- Sara trial 'litmus test' for democracy (2026-05-24 16:10)

HOUSE Assistant Majority Leader and Lanao del Sur 1st District Rep. Zia Alonto Adiong called the impeachment trial of Vice President Sara Duterte a "litmus test" for democracy in the country. "It is actually a litmus test for us that we can say this democracy still works," Adiong, one of the House's impeachment trial spokesmen, said in the Saturday News Forum on May 23, 2026. "And this is the perfect and democratic venue for both sides to air their complaint," he said. On May 18, 2026, the Senate convened as an impeachment court and ordered the issuance of a writ of summons directing Duterte to file an answer on the articles of impeachment. This came after the House of Representatives, voting 257-25 with nine abstentions, impeached her on May 11, over alleged misuse of confidential funds, unexplained wealth she allegedly amassed, alleged bribery, and the kill remark against President Ferdinand Marcos Jr., and sent the impeachment articles to the Senate for trial. Under the 1987 Constitution, only the House can initiate impeachment cases and only the Senate can conduct an impeachment trial. Duterte, who has a June 1, 2026, deadline to file her answer to the impeachment articles, denied the allegations in the two complaints heard by the House Committee on Justice. This committee found probable cause to impeach her on April 29, 2026, and subsequently sent the impeachment articles to the House plenary for action. Adiong said in the forum that “what we just want to establish is that there will be enough time for all the articles to be aired, to be explained to the public because... we are all stakeholders... in this issue.” “What we are talking about here is how strong our Constitution is...,” he said. Duterte’s removal from office and a lifetime ban from any government position. “Wherefore, it is respectfully prayed that after trial, the Senate, sitting as an Impeachment Court, render judgment” declaring her guilty on all the articles; imposing upon her “the penalty of removal from office as Vice President of the Republic of the Philippines and perpetual disqualification from holding any office under the Republic of the Philippines”; and declaring that she “shall further be liable to prosecution, trial, and punishment, according to law.” Article I alleged that Duterte committed culpable violations of the Constitution, graft and corruption, and betrayed public trust “through the systematic misuse, misappropriation, and irregular liquidation of confidential funds amounting to” P500 million “released to the Office of the Vice President and” P112.5 million “released to the Department of Education.” Duterte served as Education secretary before she resigned from that post in 2024. Article II alleged that she committed culpable violation of the Constitution and betrayed public trust when she: allegedly amassed “unexplained wealth manifestly disproportionate to her lawful income and earnings during her incumbency as a public official”; allegedly failed “to fully and truthfully disclose all her and her spouse’s assets, liabilities, and net worth in her Statement of Assets, Liabilities, and Net Worth (SALN), including in her SALN for the years 2022, 2023, and 2024”; and allegedly failed “to divest, and instead, willfully continued, all her business interests during her tenure as” vice president “for the years 2022, 2023, 2024, and 2025.” Article III alleged that she “committed bribery, graft and corruption, culpable violation of the Constitution, and betrayed public trust when she gave monetary gifts or payments to” certain people “to induce the violation and circumvention of procurement and other related laws.” The last article, Article IV, alleged that Duterte “committed culpable violation of the Constitution, high crimes, and betrayed public trust by contracting for the assassination of” President Ferdinand Marcos Jr., first lady Liza Araneta-Marcos, and Leyte 1st District Rep. and former speaker Ferdinand Martin Romualdez “by making grave threats, and by actively inciting sedition against the” republic. Duterte has denied making an assassination threat. In her answer to the complaints, she said that the complaints failed to show “any shred of proof” that a contract to kill ever existed. “Instead, complainants rely on exaggerated conclusions dressed up as fact,” it read. “Absent any statement of ultimate facts in any of these Impeachment Complaints, there is nothing for the respondent to answer. Respondent thus only admits averments therein insofar as they allege her election, assumption to the Office of the Vice President, appointment as Secretary of Education, and her prior offices as Mayor and Vice Mayor of Davao City,” Duterte’ s answer to the complaints read. “The rest of the allegations, including the annexes and so-called evidence attached to the Impeachment Complaints, are specifically denied for being false, misleading, irrelevant, and mere conclusions of fact and law,” it added.

- No Palace order for Torre to join manhunt for Bato (2026-05-24 16:10)

THERE is no order from President Ferdinand Marcos Jr. to former police chief Nicolas Torre III to join the manhunt for Sen. Ronald “Bato” dela Rosa, Malacañang said on Sunday. Torre, who served arrest orders against former president Rodrigo Duterte and Kingdom of Jesus Christ founder Apollo Quiboloy, had said he was ready to help in the hunt for dela Rosa, who went into hiding after the International Criminal Court (ICC) confirmed issuing a warrant for his arrest for being an alleged “indirect co-perpetrator” in Duterte’ s controversial campaign against drugs. “For now, there is nothing. I have not been given a message regarding that,” Palace spokesman Claire Castro said during an interview over dzMM. “I don’ t want to preempt the president. But right now, it seems like the PNP (Philippine National Police), NBI (National Bureau of Investigation), and CIDG (Criminal Investigation and Detection Group) have enough forces (to go after dela Rosa),” she said. Torre, now the general manager of the Metropolitan Manila Development Authority (MMDA), said he would not think twice of taking on the “special assignment” of tracking down his former boss at the PNP should Marcos give the order. But even without the directive, Torre said he and the whole MMDA would assist in the search for dela Rosa if it fell within the agency’ s jurisdiction. Castro reiterated Marcos’ instruction to all law enforcement agencies to do everything by the book. She insisted there is enough legal ground for the government to recognize and implement the ICC’ s order, contrary to dela Rosa’ s argument that only local courts have jurisdiction in his case. “There is no need to go through the local courts. That’ s what Solicitor General (Darlene) Berberabe said. No need to go through the local court. We have RA (Republic Act) 9851. It states what the government’ s first option is. It’ s clear. It’ s an international court that we’ re talking about here, not a requesting state. And that’ s what we’ re saying now; we’ re not violating any law. That’ s the government’ s view,” Castro said. The same law will be applied in case the ICC also orders the arrest of the other co-conspirators of Duterte, she said. On Sunday, Sen. Panfilo Lacson said good intelligence work is the key to tracking down and arresting high-profile personalities like dela Rosa linked to crimes against humanity. Lacson gave the advice to law enforcement agencies that are also going after prominent personalities, including Atong Ang, former Bureau of Corrections chief Gerald Bantag, and resigned party-list representative Zaldy Co. Ang had been charged with the disappearance and death of at least 26 cockfighting enthusiasts, while Bantag allegedly masterminded the killing of radio broadcaster Percy Lapid. Co, who is believed to be hiding in France, is facing plunder and graft charges over his alleged involvement in the multibillion-peso flood control budget scandal. Intelligence is the key to any law enforcement or military operation, Lacson said in a radio interview. He said that without good intelligence work and proper coordination, law enforcers tasked to arrest high-profile fugitives would be “wasting their resources.” Lacson, who once served as chief of the Philippine National Police from 1999 to 2001, was dela Rosa’s superior in the Presidential Anti-Organized Crime Task Force. Lacson scored some lawyers for being “manipulative and misleading,” including one who tried to compare his case and that of dela Rosa insofar as evading arrest is concerned. He said that his situation is different from that of dela Rosa. “Spot on. Not all lawyers are created equal. Some are learned and updated on jurisprudence; some are dumb and lazy. And yes, some are devious and manipulative with the obvious intent to mislead. All are bound by the code of ethics of the legal profession, though,” Lacson wrote on X. “There are pretender lawyers; not all lawyers are created equal. Some are learned and study hard, some are dumb and lazy, some are devious and do nothing worthwhile but force their fake ‘knowledge’ on others,” he said in Filipino and English in a radio interview. Lacson was referring to the claim of one “lawyer” that he had gone into hiding after being the subject of an arrest warrant. Dela Rosa has been on the run since the International Criminal Court ordered his arrest. Lacson pointed out that when he went into hiding as a “fugitive from injustice” in the 2010s, he did not break the law, citing the then-applicable jurisprudence (Miranda v. Tuliao) that allowed an accused to seek judicial relief even if he was not under the court’s physical custody. Lacson was eventually acquitted, and the Supreme Court affirmed the ruling. But Lacson noted the jurisprudence has since been modified since late 2025, limiting such an option to six months.

- PMA welcomes over 1k incoming members of Class 2030 (2026-05-24 16:09)

(UPDATE) AT least 367 incoming cadets, composed of 290 males and 77 females, of the Philippine Military Academy (PMA) took their oath, as they were received by their upper classmen, marking the start of their transformation from civilians into members of the Cadet Corps of the Armed Forces of the Philippines. Out of 33,640 individuals who applied, 24,630 qualified to take the PMA Entrance Exam 2025, from which 1,436 passed and underwent the rigorous screening process. The biggest number of incoming cadets came from Cordillera at 12 percent, National Capital Region and Calabarzon at 11 percent each. In his opening remarks at the Borromeo Field on Saturday, the Commandant of Cadets underscored the significance of the occasion as the first step in the cadets’ military and academic journey inside the Academy. “The Reception Rites mark a life-changing milestone — it marks the official beginning of your military career. This is not merely a ceremonial event, rather, it signifies your transition from a carefree civilian life into the disciplined, demanding, and regimented life of a cadet,” he said. Meanwhile, Vice Admiral Caesar Bernard Valencia, PMA superintendent, highlighted the Academy’s thrusts in ensuring a responsive training amidst the evolving security landscape. “The academy is aggressively undertaking initiatives to enhance our academic and military curriculum, elevating it to be at par with the highest international standards. Your children will be trained not just in the classic art of war, but in critical systems thinking, cybersecurity, international defense, and strategic leadership,” Valencia said. “We will always endeavor to provide them with the best education and training the nation can offer, ensuring that when they graduate, they are fully equipped to protect our nation in the 21st century,” he added. As members of PMA Class 2030, the incoming cadets will undergo the enhanced Bachelor of Science in Management major in Security Studies curriculum, similar to PMA Classes 2028 and 2029. The program is designed to equip cadets with competencies relevant to modern warfare, territorial defense, and the evolving operational environment, while developing the knowledge and skills essential for future military officers. The new recruits were met by the Second Class Cadet Squad Leaders from PMA “Siklab Kasilag” Class of 2028.

- Group slams no-sail zone for PH-US maritime drills (2026-05-24 16:08)

FISHERFOLK group Pambansang Lakas ng Kilusang Mamamalakaya ng Pilipinas (Pamalakaya) decried a scheduled “no-sail zone” off Zambales for the upcoming Philippines-United States Bilateral Maritime Cooperative Activity (BMCA) from May 28 to 30. Pamalakaya National Chairman Fernando Hicap said military exercises offer no benefit to Filipinos, but instead disrupt the livelihoods of local fisherfolk. “Disruptions to livelihoods result from US military exercises, which offer no benefit for Filipinos,” he said. Hicap also argued that military exercises escalate territorial tensions, leaving fisherfolk caught in the middle. He also accused the Marcos administration of sacrificing local fishing rights for the US’ geopolitical interests, adding that this is not what our local fisherfolk need. “How can the Marcos administration sacrifice the fishing rights of Filipinos on the altar of the US geopolitical agenda? Defense interoperability isn’t an immediate concern for us and doesn’t affect our daily lives.” In these trying times, the last thing the Filipino fishers need is foreign troops conducting amphibious landing exercises in our fishing waters and coastal communities,” he said. This marks the second recent fishing restriction in Zambales, following the no-sail zone policy imposed during the Balikatan exercises from April 20 to May 8. Pamalakaya said the previous no-sail zone implementation affected at least 4,840 fisherfolk in Subic, Zambales. The upcoming joint maritime exercise is expected to affect 11 coastal towns of Zambales, including Sta. Cruz, Palauig, Candelaria, Masinloc, Iba, San Antonio, Botolan, Cabangan, San Felipe, San Narciso, and Subic.

AUTHORITIES confiscated P77.78 million worth of illegal drugs and arrested 85 suspects in nationwide operations conducted from May 14 to 21, the Philippine Drug Enforcement Agency (PDEA) said on Sunday. PDEA Director General Isagani Nerez said the agency carried out 78 operations across the country during the period. “This week’s accomplishment report is a testament to the unwavering commitment, dedication and bravery of our operatives on the ground,” Nerez said in a statement. “From intercepting illegal drug shipments at the airport to dismantling drug dens and eradicating marijuana plantations in remote areas, we are proving that no corner of the country is beyond the reach of law enforcement. We will continue to intensify our antidrug operations until every community is freed from the threat of illegal drugs.” Seized during the operations were 9,596.85 grams of shabu, 12,257.32 grams of dried marijuana leaves, 41,520 fully grown marijuana plants and 12,120 marijuana seedlings believed to be intended for distribution to multiple drug networks nationwide. Of those arrested, 58 were identified as drug pushers, 11 as possessors and five as alleged drug den operators. All suspects involved in illegal drug activities will face charges under Republic Act 9165, or the Comprehensive Dangerous Drugs Act of 2002. PDEA said the confiscated items were placed in government custody for forensic examination and presented as evidence in court proceedings.

- SSS partners with anti-red tape agency for faster, streamlined services (2026-05-24 16:06)

(UPDATE) THE Social Security System (SSS) partnered with the Anti-Red Tape Authority (ARTA) as part of its commitment to ensure faster and more responsive public service. SSS President and CEO Robert Joseph de Claro said ARTA, under the leadership of Secretary Ernesto Perez, has continuously pushed for reforms in government service delivery. “On our end, the SSS remains committed to developing programs that are more responsive, practical and relevant to the everyday realities of the Filipino people,” de Claro said on ARTA’s eighth anniversary. The SSS chief in a statement emailed to The Manila Times stressed that SSS continued to strengthen frontline services, simplify processes and modernize systems to better respond to member concerns, in line with the shared goal of improving government service delivery for Filipinos. As one of the country’s largest public service institutions, de Claro said the SSS recognized that every transaction affected the daily lives of our members. “We continue to improve our systems, processes and frontline services because faster and more responsive government service is not only an operational goal, but a public responsibility,” de Claro said. “The agency’s strong financial performance in 2025 has strengthened its capacity to expand member assistance programs and accelerate reforms aimed at improving service delivery,” de Claro added. In 2025, SSS posted a net income of P142.97 billion while its Reserve Fund surpassed the P1-trillion mark for the first time in the institution’s history, a major milestone that further strengthens the long-term stability of the pension fund for current and future members. “Its strong financial position allows it to invest directly in better services, new technologies, infrastructure upgrades and programs that will improve the experience of its members,” according to the top SSS official. De Claro likewise highlighted the agency’s expanded relief programs designed to help Filipino workers and families cope with the continuing impact of the national energy emergency. Moreover, de Claro said SSS was also preparing to roll out the Energy Sustainability Loan Program in September. The program allows qualified SSS members with a Mandatory Provident Fund (MPF) account to avail themselves of financing to install residential solar panel systems, payable for up to seven years, the SSS chief executive said. The MPF is a compulsory retirement savings scheme that automatically enrolls SSS members who are contributing to the regular SSS program with a monthly salary credit above P20,000, he said. Furthermore, the SSS head revealed that the agency aimed to support at least 100,000 homes by 2028 through the program, which seeks to help families manage rising electricity costs while promoting long-term energy sustainability. The initiative reflects the evolving role of SSS in responding not only to traditional social security concerns, but also to emerging economic pressures affecting Filipino households, de Claro said.

- Japanese, American fugitives nabbed in back-to-back operations (2026-05-24 16:05)

(UPDATE) AUTHORITIES arrested two foreigners suspected of involvement in child exploitation cases in separate operations conducted in Cavite and Tarlac provinces. In a news release on Sunday, Bureau of Immigration (BI)-Fugitive Search Unit chief Rendel Ryan Sy said police and immigration agents nabbed Japanese Yuto Konno, 43, during an operation in Cavite on May 12. He is wanted by Japanese authorities for forcible sexual intercourse and forcible indecency with a child. Records showed that in 2018, he allegedly molested three minors inside a restroom facility in Hokkaido, Japan. A warrant for his arrest was issued by the Nagoya Summary Court on Aug. 16, 2024. Authorities seized from him several electronic devices allegedly containing child sexual abuse or exploitation materials. Immigration records revealed that the suspect arrived in the Philippines in 2019 as a temporary visitor and has overstayed since April 2022. He was also found to have an active blacklist and watch list orders for undesirability and overstaying. In a separate operation on May 13, 37-year-old American Tony Le was arrested in Bamban, Tarlac. Le is wanted by United States authorities for charges related to enticing and coercing a minor to engage in sexual activity, in violation of US federal laws involving child sexual exploitation materials. The arrest stemmed from information provided by the US government regarding his presence in Tarlac. Verification by immigration authorities showed that Le had previously been excluded from entering the country in February 2024 due to derogatory records connected to possible child sex exploitation investigations. Authorities believe he may have illegally entered the Philippines. Both fugitives are under the custody of the BI Warden Facility pending deportation proceedings.

- ‘Palaro’ athletes told: Compete with integrity (2026-05-24 16:05)

SPEAKER and Isabela 6th District Rep. Faustino "Bojie" Dy III urged athletes to compete with pride and integrity in the 2026 Palarong Pambansa, which he described as an opportunity for them to build character, make friends, and learn. "The Palarong Pambansa is a celebration of the hard work, discipline, teamwork, and dreams of the Filipino youth," Dy said in Filipino and English in a video message on Sunday, posted ahead of the games' opening. "It goes beyond sports — it is an opportunity for our youth to build character, form lifelong friendships, learn the value of perseverance, and discover how far hard work and determination can take them," he said. Dy told all who have reached the games that they could already be considered winners "because of your dedication and perseverance that you showed." "To our athletes: compete with passion, play with integrity, and represent your schools and communities, and regions with pride and honor", Dy said. The May 24–31, 2026, Palarong Pambansa features new sports. "Palarong Pambansa continues to evolve alongside the aspirations of our learners. This year, we are opening more spaces for participation, recognizing more forms of athletic excellence, and creating a competition environment that is fairer and more inclusive for every student-athlete," Angara said in a statement on Friday. "We believe that through a fairer and more inclusive Palarong Pambansa this year, every young athlete will be given greater opportunities to show their talent, potential, and excellence," he said. Weightlifting, football for secondary girls, and futsal for elementary girls were added "to the list of regular sports and events," the DepEd said in the Friday statement. "The games will also showcase demonstration sports including Karate, Kickboxing, and Soft Tennis, while Muay Thai and selected Paragames events — namely Sitting Volleyball and Table Tennis — will be featured as exhibition events to support greater inclusivity in school sports," it said. The DepEd added that participation this year "expands with the return of the Negros Island Region (NIR) as a separate regional delegation." The Philippine Schools Overseas and the National Academy of Sports, the DepEd said, "will field independent delegations, broadening the reach of the competition and allowing more learners to represent their communities and institutions." The department added that it would implement updated policies for some of the events. "These include a modified Winner-Take-All policy for team sports such as baseball, basketball, football, futsal, sepak takraw, softball, and volleyball; the continuation of qualifying standards for athletics, swimming, and archery; and the Home Region Representation Policy," it said. "Eligible athletes from the National Training Pool and National Developmental Pool are also now welcomed to participate," the DepEd said.

- PNP: Crime rate down under 'safer cities' drive (2026-05-24 16:04)

THE Philippine National Police (PNP) said Sunday that the country's crime rate dropped by 16 percent during the first 43 days of implementing the anti-crime program "Safer Cities." Data show that a total of 3,776 focus crimes were recorded from April 6, when the campaign was launched, to May 18. This was lower than the 4,495 focus crimes recorded from Feb. 22 to April 5, reflecting a decrease of 719 cases or 15.99 percent. All eight focus crimes — murder, homicide, physical injury, rape, robbery, theft, car theft, and motorcycle theft — registered decreases during the monitoring period. Rape cases fell by 30.61 percent; carjacking of motor vehicles, 28.20 percent; physical injury, 25.93 percent; robbery, 15.12 percent; theft, 10.61 percent; motorcycle theft, 6.64 percent; homicide, 5 percent; and murder, 2.17 percent. In the National Capital Region, the focus crime incidents declined by 8.57 percent during the same monitoring period. The PNP attributed the improvement to proactive policing strategies, intelligence-driven operations, strategic deployment of personnel, and sustained coordination with local government units and stakeholders. PNP chief Gen. Jose Melencio Nartatez Jr. said the initial gains of the safer cities initiative demonstrate the effectiveness of sustained police presence and responsive law enforcement operations in urban centers and communities. "Ang pagbaba ng focus crimes ay bunga ng mas pinaigting na police presence, mabilis na response, at pakikipagtulungan ng iba't ibang sektor sa ating kapulisan. Patuloy nating palalakasin ang ating mga hakbang upang mapanatili ang kaayusan at kaligtasan ng mamamayan (The decrease in focus crimes is a result of increased police presence, rapid response, and collaboration between various sectors in our police force. We will continue to strengthen our measures to maintain order and the safety of the people.)," Nartatez said in a statement.

- BI seeks stronger coordination with LGUs (2026-05-24 16:03)

THE Bureau of Immigration (BI) has called for stronger coordination between the national government and local government units (LGUs) through direct reporting channels, joint operations, information-sharing and community-based monitoring of immigration-related concerns. Immigration Commissioner Joel Anthony Viado said in a news release on Saturday that the bureau would conduct a series of training and capability-building activities with LGUs and local partner agencies to strengthen the awareness and enforcement of immigration laws, improve detection of immigration violations and enhance coordination in responding to community concerns involving foreign nationals. He said the initiative was part of the bureau's continuing efforts to strengthen immigration enforcement, border security, interagency coordination and public service modernization. "Our objective is simple: to protect our communities, uphold the rule of law and ensure that the Philippines remains a safe, respected and welcoming destination for responsible visitors," he added. On Friday, Viado met with local government officials and law enforcement partners in Siargao to address growing community concerns related to immigration violations, public order and responsible tourism in key destinations. During the meeting, he emphasized that the Philippines remained open to legitimate tourists, investors, students and foreign residents who respect Philippine laws, local culture and communities. "Filipinos are known around the world for their warmth, hospitality and friendliness toward visitors. We take pride in welcoming people into our communities. But that hospitality should never be abused, taken advantage of or mistaken for weakness," he said. Viado acknowledged the concerns raised by LGUs and residents regarding overstaying foreigners, disorderly conduct, illegal work, environmental violations and other activities that negatively impact local communities. "The vast majority of foreign visitors contribute positively to our economy and communities. However, foreign nationals who violate our immigration laws, threaten public order or exploit our people will face appropriate sanctions, including deportation and blacklisting when warranted," he said. He added that immigration enforcement will be based on conduct and violations, not nationality, race or religion. "This should serve as a clear warning to foreign nationals who intend to abuse our hospitality, violate our laws or disrespect our communities: The Philippines will not hesitate to enforce its immigration laws and take necessary action against offenders," he said. Viado also announced the strengthening of the BI's local immigration office in Siargao to ensure faster response to community complaints, closer coordination with LGUs and law enforcement, stricter monitoring of immigration violations and a more visible government presence in the area.

- Urban poor agency backs balanced housing program (2026-05-24 16:02)

(UPDATE) THE Presidential Commission for the Urban Poor (PCUP) has thrown its full support to the Department of Human Settlements and Urban Development (DHSUD) in its ongoing efforts to implement the Balanced Housing Development Program (BHDP) which involves private realty developers. PCUP Chairman Michelle Anne Gonzales said on Sunday that the agency has passed a resolution in the wake of an opinion issued by the Department of Justice and the findings of the Commission on Audit which showed that the incentivized compliance scheme resulted in the under-computation and under-collection of mandatory compliance obligations contrary to the minimum participation rates required by law. The DOJ directed the recomputation and collection of deficiencies that deprived the government of substantial resources intended for socialized housing production. "The PCUP strongly endorsed the position of the DHSUD in strictly enforcing the BHDP and supporting the reassessment, recomputation and recovery of deficiencies arising from the incentivized compliance mechanism,” Gonzales said. With the four PCUP commissioners — Emmanuel Gison, Bret Monsanto, Reynaldo Galupo and Remedios Chan — expressing their support, Gonzales said it would only indicate the agency’s unified stand in upholding balanced housing compliance and protecting the interests of urban poor communities. “The commission expresses its full support for the DHSUD’s ongoing efforts to correct prior implementation issues and to strictly enforce the law as intended,” the PCUP chief said. The PCUP officials acknowledged that some private developers may have complied in good faith based on existing administrative issuances. Thus, the commission recommended that enforcement and collection measures be implemented fairly and reasonably, including possible phased payment arrangements or other equitable compliance mechanisms consistent with law, Galupo told The Manila Times. In the same resolution, Galupo said PCUP has also recommended that a substantial portion of escrow fund collections be earmarked for a dedicated socialized housing reserve for families displaced by court-ordered evictions and demolitions, especially those lacking adequate relocation assistance. According to DHSUD, the initiative is projected to generate P30 billion in collections, which could enable the construction of around 30,000 socialized housing units. “Every peso properly collected under BHDP translates into additional housing opportunities and greater security for vulnerable Filipino families,” the top PCUP official said.

MANILA, Philippines — President Ferdinand Marcos Jr. on Sunday paid his respects to instructor pilot First Lieutenant Ruth Angelique Pasos and aviation student Second Lieutenant Cherky Embudo, the two Philippine Air Force (PAF) pilots who perished in a crash in Tuba, Benguet last May 20. In photos shared by the Presidential Communications Office (PCO), Marcos personally visited the PAF Mortuary in Villamor Airbase in Pasay City to express his sympathies to Pasos’ and Embudo’s families and lauded their heroism, dedication, and loyal service to the nation. The Commander-in-Chief awarded the posthumous Silver Wing Medal to Pasos and Embudo in recognition of their sacrifice, bravery, and service to the nation. Pasos and Embudo were aboard the SF-260 trainer plane on a navigation training flight last Wednesday when it crashed in Sitio Cabuyao while en route to Baguio City. The ill-fated aircraft was part of a group of 11 SF-260 trainer aircraft that took off from the Fernando Air Base in Lipa City, Batangas for a training mission.

- Gaza hospital says child among three killed in Israeli strike (2026-05-24 15:32)

GAZA — A pre-dawn Israeli airstrike killed three members of a Palestinian family, including a one-year-old child, in central Gaza on Sunday, a hospital said. Gaza remains gripped with daily violence despite a formal ceasefire in place since October, with both the Israeli military and Hamas accusing one another of violating the truce. Al-Aqsa Martyrs hospital in Deir el-Balah said it had received the bodies of a couple and their infant after an Israeli strike hit a residential apartment in the Al-Nuseirat camp before dawn. “He was asleep in his house with his wife and son when the missile landed on their bed," Maram Abu Malouh, the mother of the man killed in the strike, told AFP. AFP footage showed relatives grieving at the hospital, where the three bodies lay wrapped in white body bags. The Gaza civil defence agency, which operates as a rescue service under Hamas, confirmed the toll. Al-Aqsa Martyrs hospital said around 10 people were also wounded. There was no immediate comment from the Israeli military about the three deaths, though it said it had struck three Hamas weapons storage facilities in central Gaza over the preceding 24 hours. The civil defence agency said another Israeli strike early on Monday in Deir el-Balah caused no casualties but left vast destruction. A gaping hole scarred the facade of a building, with vast debris of shattered concrete strewn across the surrounding area, AFP footage showed. Residents, among them children, were seen picking through the debris at the site of the attack. A ceasefire has been in place in Gaza since October, but Israel reserves the right to strike targets it deems a threat. At least 890 Palestinians have been killed since the October 10 ceasefire, according to Gaza's health ministry, which operates under Hamas authority and whose figures are considered reliable by the UN. The Israeli military says five of its soldiers have also been during the same period. Media restrictions and limited access in Gaza have prevented AFP from independently verifying casualty figures or freely covering the fighting.

- Anxious Chinese families await news of missing coal miners (2026-05-24 14:54)

CHINA — A man nervously smoked a cigarette as he sat by a checkpoint, waiting for news of his older brother caught up in China's worst mining disaster in nearly two decades. His 47-year-old sibling, a father of three, was working in the Liushenyu shaft in northern China's Shanxi province on Friday when a catastrophic gas explosion ripped through the mine, killing at least 82 people. A total of 247 workers were underground at the time, according to state media. Emergency rescuers were racing on Sunday to find two people still missing, state media reported, but it was unclear if the man's brother was one of them -- or indeed if more people were missing than had been reported. Phone calls to the man's brother "wouldn't go through" since the explosion, he told AFP, asking not to be named, adding that his parents are still unaware that their older son is missing. "I don't dare tell them," he said. The man and a few other family members milled around the checkpoint on Sunday that prevented them from continuing up the road to the mine, hoping for information about their loved ones. Police kept a watchful eye nearby, ordering AFP reporters at the checkpoint to avoid talking to the families and to leave the area. The man said his brother, whose youngest child is just five, had been working at the mine for three to four years, earning around 7,000 to 10,000 yuan ($1,030 to $1,470) a month. "I really hope nothing has happened to him," the younger brother said. "They say two people are missing, but who knows if that's accurate? We honestly don't know," he added. He said he had "no idea how the accident actually happened" and hoped only that his brother is safe. - 'Worst' management - As family members paced back and forth near the checkpoint, ambulances and police cars were allowed through. Some relatives wiped tears from their faces, AFP reporters saw. Rugged and mountainous Shanxi, one of China's poorer provinces, is the centre of the country's coal mining industry. While mine safety in China has improved in recent decades, accidents still occur in an industry where safety protocols are often lax and regulations vague. Chinese authorities have launched an investigation into the blast, saying initial findings showed the Tongzhou Group operating the mine had committed "serious illegal violations". "Those found responsible will be severely punished in accordance with laws and regulations," officials told a news conference on Saturday. Miners working at the Liushenyu shaft accused their employer of a lack of care, with two telling AFP they had not been paid in months. "From what I've seen, the management (at this company) is the worst," said a 58-year-old miner from Shandong, who has worked in several coal mines over the last three decades. The miner, who wished to remain anonymous for fear of repercussions, said workers at the mine paid for safety helmets out of their own pockets. They told AFP they had been working a morning shift on Friday and were not in the mine during the gas explosion. "If we had been (working) a few hours later, it would have been us," the 58-year-old told AFP. "I feel really heartbroken." AFP has contacted Tongzhou Group for comment. - 'Worried sick' - One middle-aged woman sitting under a tree near the checkpoint waited for information about her husband, a coal miner who also remained unaccounted for. "Worrying about it won't do any good," she told AFP, not wanting to give her name. "We're already worried sick, but being anxious doesn't change anything," she said. Her husband of more than 20 years, who was unreachable since the explosion, rarely talked about his job, she told AFP. "You should go ahead and do your work first," she said, brushing AFP reporters away. "I'm really not in the mood to talk about this."

- Turkey riot police use tear gas to take opposition party HQ (2026-05-24 14:41)

ANKARA, Turkey — Hundreds of Turkish riot police using teargas forced their way into the Ankara headquarters of the main CHP opposition party on Sunday after a court dismissed its leadership, AFP journalists saw. Party members had blocked the building's entrances, defying the court order issued Thursday as part of an official probe against the Republican People's Party (CHP), before officers broke in to remove the group's leader. A prominent rights NGO, Human Rights Watch, on Saturday warned that President Recep Tayyip Erdogan's government was undermining Turkish democracy with "abusive tactics" against the CHP. Last year, Turkish authorities jailed Erdogan's main political rival, Istanbul mayor Ekrem Imamoglu, who was the CHP's candidate for the presidential election due in 2028. The court order on Thursday cancelled the 2023 victory in party elections of CHP head Ozgur Ozel and named its former chair Kemal Kilicdaroglu -- a lacklustre figure who chalked up a string of electoral defeats -- as interim leader. "The Republican People's Party will from now be on the streets or in the squares," Ozel said as he was forced out of the building. "We will march towards the seat of power," he vowed as he set off for parliament surrounded by supporters. Kilicdaroglu's backers had tried to push their way in, before police received orders to step in and take the building. Last year, similar scenes took place in Istanbul, when the courts named an administrator to take charge of the regional CHP offices. Human Rights Watch called the court order "the latest deeply damaging blow to the rule of law, democracy and human rights" in Turkey.

- Foreigner dies as rescuers race to free 2 trapped workers from collapsed building; search for missing continues (2026-05-24 14:05)

ANGELES, Philippines — Rescuers were racing on Sunday to free two workers pinned under a building that collapsed in the northern Philippines, killing a Malaysian man and leaving 20 people missing. The search for survivors continued as night fell, with firemen shining small lights into the rubble for signs of life. Twenty-six people have been rescued so far after the nine-storey building collapsed in Angeles City, 80 kilometres (50 miles) north of the capital Manila. The disaster also damaged a nearby hotel and killed a 65-year-old Malaysian guest, Mohd Rezal bin Abdullah, officials said. The man, from Malaysia's northern Sabah state, had managed to communicate with rescuers by phone while pinned under a hotel wall shortly after the collapse at 3 a.m. Sunday, acting Philippine fire chief Rico Kwan Tiu told AFP. "Unfortunately, when we retrieved him just now, he was already lifeless," he added. "We are trying to rescue two (workers)" from the nine-storey building, Kwan Tiu said. "They are conscious but pinned underneath." City Mayor Carmelo Lazatin told reporters "almost all of (those inside the collapsed building) were asleep because this happened in the early hours of the morning." Rescuers posted footage on the regional fire service's Facebook page showing a fireman using a power tool to try to free a man in a blue shirt who moaned in pain beneath a scaffolding of metal tubes and plyboard. "Relax, brother," the fireman is heard telling the victim. Another clip showed firemen in orange helmets and clothing inserting themselves through narrow gaps among rubble in an attempt to find other trapped workers. The cause of the collapse is yet to be determined. 'Loud noise' Delivery rider James Bernardo, 30, told AFP by telephone he had just dropped off food on the same street when the disaster unfolded. "A few seconds later, there was suddenly a loud noise in the area, and when I looked, I realized that (the building) had already collapsed," Bernardo said. "Thank God I'm safe." A video clip taken by Bernardo and verified by AFP showed a giant pile of twisted steel beams, power pylons and slabs of concrete blocking the street as fellow witnesses took photographs with their phones. In the clip, Bernardo can be heard saying, "We thought it was an earthquake, but it turned out it was the building (collapsing)." City information officer Jay Pelayo told AFP the nine-storey building's walls and scaffolding had buckled, likely trapping people in a pile of debris. "There are big chunks of concrete and we need equipment to lift them up. That is what's challenging for the rescue right now," Pelayo said. Rescuers working at the disaster site did not have powerful flood lights to help them locate those trapped under the rubble, AFP journalists saw. The Metropolitan Manila Development Authority sent rescue equipment and police dogs to aid the rescue, its general manager Nicolas Torre told AFP. "We also deployed life monitors, listening devices and also our rescue spreaders to help the rescuers since many debris need to be cut and lifted to locate people," Torre said.

MANILA, Philippines — At least 367 incoming cadets, composed of 290 males and 77 females, of the Philippine Military Academy (PMA) took their oath, as they were received by their upper classmen, marking the start of their transformation from civilians into members of the Cadet Corps of the Armed Forces of the Philippines. Out of 33,640 individuals who applied, 24,630 qualified to take the PMA Entrance Exam 2025, from which 1,436 passed and underwent the rigorous screening process. The biggest number of incoming cadets came from Cordillera at 12 percent, National Capital Region and Calabarzon at 11 percent each. In his opening remarks at the Borromeo Field on Saturday, the Commandant of Cadets underscored the significance of the occasion as the first step in the cadets' military and academic journey inside the Academy. "The Reception Rites mark a life-changing milestone — it marks the official beginning of your military career. This is not merely a ceremonial event, rather, it signifies your transition from a carefree civilian life into the disciplined, demanding, and regimented life of a cadet," he said. Meanwhile, Vice Admiral Caesar Bernard Valencia, PMA superintendent, highlighted the Academy's thrusts in ensuring a responsive training amidst the evolving security landscape. "The academy is aggressively undertaking initiatives to enhance our academic and military curriculum, elevating it to be at par with the highest international standards. Your children will be trained not just in the classic art of war, but in critical systems thinking, cybersecurity, international defense, and strategic leadership," Valencia said. "We will always endeavor to provide them with the best education and training the nation can offer, ensuring that when they graduate, they are fully equipped to protect our nation in the 21st century," he added. As members of PMA Class 2030, the incoming cadets will undergo the enhanced Bachelor of Science in Management major in Security Studies curriculum, similar to PMA Classes 2028 and 2029. The program is designed to equip cadets with competencies relevant to modern warfare, territorial defense, and the evolving operational environment, while developing the knowledge and skills essential for future military officers. The new recruits were met by the Second Class Cadet Squad Leaders from PMA "Siklab Kasilag" Class of 2028.

- Urban poor agency backs enforcement of balanced housing requirements (2026-05-24 04:18)

MANILA, Philippines — The Presidential Commission for the Urban Poor (PCUP) has thrown its full support to the Department of Human Settlements and Urban Development (DHSUD) in its ongoing efforts to implement the Balanced Housing Development Program (BHDP) which involving private realty developers. PCUP Chairman Michelle Anne Gonzales said on Sunday that the agency has passed a resolution in the wake of an opinion issued by the Department of Justice and the findings of the Commission on Audit (COA) which showed that the incentivized compliance scheme resulted in the under-computation and under-collection of mandatory compliance obligations contrary to the minimum participation rates required by law. The DOJ directed the re-computation and collection of deficiencies that deprived the government of substantial resources intended for socialized housing production. "The PCUP strongly endorsed the position of the DHSUD in strictly enforcing the BHDP and supporting the reassessment, re-computation, and recovery of deficiencies arising from the incentivized compliance mechanism," Gonzales said. With the four PCUP commissioners - lawyer Emmanuel Gison, lawyer Bret Monsanto, Reynaldo Galupo, and Remedios Chan - expressing their support, Gonzales said it would only indicate the agency's unified stand in upholding balanced housing compliance and protecting the interests of urban poor communities. "The commission expresses its full support for the DHSUD's ongoing efforts to correct prior implementation issues and to strictly enforce the law as intended,” the PCUP chief said. The PCUP officials acknowledged that some private developers may have complied in good faith based on existing administrative issuances. Thus, the commission recommended that enforcement and collection measures be implemented fairly and reasonably, including possible phased payment arrangements or other equitable compliance mechanisms consistent with law, Galupo told The Manila Times. In the same resolution, Galupo said PCUP has also recommended that a substantial portion of escrow fund collections be earmarked for a dedicated socialized housing reserve for families displaced by court-ordered evictions and demolitions, especially those lacking adequate relocation assistance. According to DHSUD, the initiative is projected to generate P30-billion in collections, which could enable the construction of around 30,000 socialized housing units. “Every peso properly collected under BHDP translates into additional housing opportunities and greater security for vulnerable Filipino families,” the top PCUP official said.

- Former lawmaker says plunder complaint 'baseless,' ready to defend self (2026-05-24 03:42)

MANILA, Philippines – A former lawmaker and Environment and Natural Resources secretary on Sunday blasted the timing of the filing of a plunder complaint against him, Sen. Rodante Marcoleta and two others, saying “it was completely baseless and appears to be built on assumptions and speculation.” But Michael “Mike” Defensor, Anakalusugan party-list congressman, told The Manila Times through Viber that he and the other respondents would be ready to answer every allegation at the proper forum and “we are prepared to fully defend ourselves.” “I have faith in our institutions and in the rule of law. I trust that when facts—not politics, assumptions, or publicity—are examined, the truth will prevail,” said Defensor, a former Malacanang chief of staff under the administration of then president and now Pampanga Rep. Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo. “I have faced many battles in public life before. We will face this one head-on, and we will let the evidence speak,” he said. The nephew of late senator Miriam Defensor-Santiago reiterated that he never committed wrongdoing. “There was no illegal act, no corrupt transaction, no favor sought, and absolutely no conspiracy to commit any crime,” he said. The mere act of giving or receiving funds does not automatically constitute plunder, bribery, or corruption. The law requires facts and evidence—not insinuations, said Defensor, also a former Quezon City councilor before he became a member of the House of Representatives representing the city’s District 3. “What is disturbing is the reckless effort to elevate ordinary and lawful acts into serious criminal accusations without showing any clear connection to a government contract, official act, undue benefit, or quid pro quo. Serious charges like plunder should never be used for headlines or harassment,” he pointed out. He was made to believe that there was an ill motive behind dragging his name into the matter. “The timing and manner by which this has surfaced naturally raise questions. But regardless of motive, we will confront this directly and through the proper legal process,” according to Defensor, who recently made news when he introduced to Marcoleta an ex-Marine sergeant – Orly Guteza – who became a surprise whistleblower at the height of the Senate inquiry on flood control project scandal. In an order dated May 21, 2026, the Office of the Ombudsman gave the respondents 15 days from receipt of its order to submit their counter-affidavits. In the complaint, filed last May 18, the investigators said Marcoleta's acceptance of gifts worth a total of P75 million on three separate occasions when he was a member of the House constituted the crime of plunder. The investigators said that Marcoleta, on Jan. 6, 2025, received P30 million from Defensor, which, they said, was "evidenced by a donor's tax return and a... deposit slip showing that Defensor paid the donor's tax on" Dec. 17, 2025.

- Japanese, American fugitives nabbed in back-to-back operations (2026-05-24 03:32)

MANILA, Philippines – Authorities arrested two foreigners suspected of involvement in child exploitation cases in separate operations conducted in Cavite and Tarlac provinces. In a news release Sunday, Bureau of Immigration-Fugitive Search Unit Chief Rendel Ryan Sy said police and immigration agents nabbed Japanese Yuto Konno, 43, during an operation in Cavite on May 12. He is wanted by Japanese authorities for forcible sexual intercourse and forcible indecency with a child. Records showed that in 2018, he allegedly molested three minors inside a restroom facility in Hokkaido, Japan. A warrant for his arrest was issued by the Nagoya Summary Court on Aug. 16, 2024. Authorities seized from him several electronic devices allegedly containing child sexual abuse or exploitation materials. Immigration records revealed that the suspect arrived in the Philippines in 2019 as a temporary visitor and has overstayed since April 2022. He was also found to have active blacklist and watchlist orders for undesirability and overstaying. In a separate operation on May 13, 37-year-old American national Tony Le was arrested in Bamban, Tarlac. Le is wanted by US authorities for charges related to enticing and coercing a minor to engage in sexual activity, in violation of US federal laws involving child sexual exploitation materials. The arrest stemmed from information provided by the US government regarding his presence in Tarlac. Verification by immigration authorities showed that Le had previously been excluded from entering the country in February 2024 due to derogatory records connected to possible child sex exploitation investigations. Authorities believe he may have illegally entered the Philippines. Both fugitives are under the custody of the BI Warden Facility pending deportation proceedings.

- SSS partners with anti-red tape agency for faster, streamlined services (2026-05-24 02:53)

MANILA, Philippines – The Social Security System (SSS) partnered with the Anti-Red Tape Authority (ARTA) as part of its commitment to ensure faster and more responsive public service. SSS President and CEO Robert Joseph de Claro said ARTA, under the leadership of Secretary Ernesto Perez, has continuously pushed for reforms in government service delivery. “On our end, the SSS remains committed to developing programs that are more responsive, practical, and relevant to the everyday realities of the Filipino people,” de Claro said on ARTA's 8th anniversary. The SSS chief in a statement emailed to The Manila Times stressed that SSS continued to strengthen frontline services, simplify processes, and modernize systems to better respond to member concerns, in line with the shared goal of improving government service delivery for Filipinos. As one of the country's largest public service institutions, de Claro said the SSS recognized that every transaction affected the daily lives of our members. “We continue to improve our systems, processes, and frontline services because faster and more responsive government service is not only an operational goal, but a public responsibility,” de Claro said. “The agency's strong financial performance in 2025 has strengthened its capacity to expand member assistance programs and accelerate reforms aimed at improving service delivery,” de Claro added. In 2025, SSS posted a net income of P142.97-billion while its Reserve Fund surpassed the P1-Trillion mark for the first time in the institution's history, a major milestone that further strengthens the long-term stability of the pension fund for current and future members. “Its strong financial position allows it to invest directly in better services, new technologies, infrastructure upgrades, and programs that will improve the experience of its members,” according to the top SSS official. De Claro likewise highlighted the agency's expanded relief programs designed to help Filipino workers and families cope with the continuing impact of the national energy emergency. Moreover, de Claro said SSS was also preparing to roll out the Energy Sustainability Loan Program in September. The program allows qualified SSS members with a Mandatory Provident Fund (MPF) account to avail themselves of financing to install residential solar panel systems, payable for up to seven years, the SSS chief executive said. The MPF is a compulsory retirement savings scheme that automatically enrolls SSS members who are contributing to the regular SSS program with a monthly salary credit above P20,000, he said. Furthermore, the SSS head revealed that the agency aimed to support at least 100,000 homes by 2028 through the program, which seeks to help families manage rising electricity costs while promoting long-term energy sustainability. The initiative reflects the evolving role of SSS in responding not only to traditional social security concerns, but also to emerging economic pressures affecting Filipino households, de Claro said.

- Trough of new LPA outside PH to bring rain over Mindanao areas (2026-05-23 23:17)

MANILA, Philippines – The state-run weather agency said Sunday that it is closely monitoring the movement of a low-pressure area (LPA) outside the Philippine Area of Responsibility (PAR). Weather specialist Veronica Torres of the Philippine Atmospheric Geophysical and Astronomical Services Administration (Pagasa) said in a 5 a.m. briefing that the weather disturbance, estimated at 2,195 kilometers east of southern Mindanao, would not be a threat to any part of the archipelago in the next 24 to 48 hours. However, its trough or extension has already been affecting Mindanao, Palawan, Eastern Samar, and Southern Leyte, bringing cloudy skies with scattered rain showers and thunderstorms, she said. “Flash floods or landslides due to moderate to at times heavy rains would be even possible in these areas due to the trough of the LPA,” the Pagasa forecaster added. Meanwhile, another weather system, the easterlies – winds that carry warm and humid weather – would be experienced over Bicol Region and Quezon province, bringing partly cloudy to overcast skies with isolated rain showers or thunderstorms possibly within 24 hours, Pagasa said. Metro Manila and the rest of the country would be experiencing a similar weather pattern due to localized thunderstorms, Torres said.

- NBI expects more ICC arrest warrants soon (2026-05-23 16:18)

THE National Bureau of Investigation (NBI) said Saturday that more individuals may soon face arrest warrants from the International Criminal Court (ICC) and assured the public that law enforcement agencies are prepared to enforce these orders. NBI Director Melvin Matibag said the bureau had received information indicating that additional warrants may be issued in the coming days in connection with ongoing ICC proceedings involving alleged crimes against humanity. “We have information that there are several who may be issued arrest warrants,” Matibag said during the news forum. He added that authorities would act regardless of the identities of those named in the warrants. “It doesn’t matter who it is or what crime is involved. As long as there is a warrant, we have a protocol. So if an additional arrest warrant comes out, we are always ready to enforce and serve it,” he said. Matibag said the NBI would not disclose further details on possible targets, citing operational security. Dela Rosa armed, dangerous The NBI chief also addressed the ongoing manhunt for Sen. Ronald dela Rosa, who is facing an ICC arrest warrant linked to a crime against humanity charge arising from the Duterte administration’s bloody war on drugs in which thousands of suspects were killed without trial. Matibag said dela Rosa is being treated as “armed and dangerous,” a standard law enforcement classification for fugitives, particularly those with prior security or police experience. “It is our standard protocol that when we are locating a fugitive from justice, our assumption is that he is armed and dangerous,” Matibag said. He added that dela Rosa’s background as a former Philippine National Police (PNP) chief may complicate efforts to track him. “He knows how law enforcement works, so that is one of the concerns in our operation,” he said. Despite this, Matibag said authorities remain confident that the law will be enforced. “The law will catch up with you, and law enforcers will get you wherever you are,”

he said. He also urged dela Rosa to surrender and face the charges before the ICC. No record of departure. Matibag said coordination with the Bureau of Immigration showed no record of dela Rosa leaving the country. “Based on Bureau of Immigration records and monitored points of entry and exit, there is no record of his departure,” he said. However, he acknowledged the difficulty of monitoring all possible exit points nationwide and said authorities continue to receive daily leads suggesting the senator remains in the Philippines. The Department of Justice has previously described dela Rosa as a fugitive from justice. Matibag also clarified that dela Rosa’s lawyer cannot receive the arrest warrant on the senator’s behalf. “I think the lawyer might be thinking he can be the one to serve the warrant, but that is not how it works,” he said. The NBI said it is also examining whether other individuals or groups may be assisting the senator in evading arrest. Matibag warned that those who may be helping could face charges for obstruction of justice. The bureau has deployed tracker teams and additional units to assist in locating dela Rosa. Authorities have also urged the public to report any information on his whereabouts. Padilla urged to cooperate. Matibag called on Sen. Robinhood Padilla to cooperate with investigators, after Padilla confirmed that he had given dela Rosa a ride to Makati following their exit from the Senate on May 13, hours after a shooting incident in the Senate complex. “Without even law enforcement asking, I think as a responsible senator and citizen, he should help shed light on what happened,” Matibag said. Dela Rosa is among individuals facing allegations tied to the Duterte administration’s anti-drug campaign, during which he served as PNP chief from 2016 to 2018. The Supreme Court earlier rejected dela Rosa’s bid to block the enforcement of the ICC warrant, clearing the way for possible arrest actions by local authorities. Surrender unlikely. Sen. Panfilo Lacson said dela Rosa is unlikely to voluntarily surrender to the ICC, as he appears to be banking on political developments that could prevent his possible turnover to the ICC, particularly if political allies regain influence in the coming years. “For EJK (extrajudicial killing) victims, yes; for the Filipino people, yes. But for Sen. dela Rosa, that is not in his best interest,” Lacson said. “He is hiding, hoping that if Vice President Sara Duterte wins (the presidency in 2028), he will not surrender. Senator Bato plans to just wait three years, although he will remain an international fugitive. Since he will not be turned over, he can roam around the Philippines.” The remarks came amid renewed public debate over accountability for thousands of deaths linked to the Duterte administration’s anti-illegal drugs campaign, one of the most controversial law enforcement programs in recent Philippine history. Dela Rosa, a former chief of the Philippine National Police and chief implementer of the war on drugs during the early years of the Duterte administration, has repeatedly denied allegations that state forces systematically carried out extrajudicial killings during anti-drug operations. Human rights organizations, however, estimate that as many as 30,000 suspected drug pushers, addicts and civilians died during police operations and vigilante-style killings between 2016 and 2022. The ICC investigation centers on allegations of crimes against humanity tied to the anti-drug campaign, including accusations that law enforcement personnel engaged in unlawful killings under a state-backed policy targeting suspected drug offenders. Former president Rodrigo Duterte, who built his presidency on a hardline anti-crime platform, has long defended the campaign, insisting that police officers were only instructed to use force in self-defense. Critics, however, argue that many victims were killed without due process and that accountability mechanisms within the country were inadequate. Lacson, himself a former police chief and longtime lawmaker, said there appears to be an inconsistency in how authorities handled the situations involving Duterte and dela Rosa. He pointed out that Duterte was reportedly transported directly to The Hague following his arrest, while no similar action has been taken against dela Rosa despite his alleged connection to the same ICC investigation. “There is an inconsistency in the case of former president Rodrigo Duterte and Sen. Bato dela Rosa,” Lacson said. “In Duterte’s case, he was immediately flown to The Hague after his capture, while in the case of dela Rosa, he was not arrested.” Legal analysts note that any potential arrest or surrender of dela Rosa would depend largely on the Philippine government’s level of cooperation with the ICC. Although the Philippines officially withdrew from the Rome Statute in 2019 under Duterte’s administration, the tribunal has maintained that it retains jurisdiction over alleged crimes committed while the country was still a member of the treaty. The administration of President Ferdinand Marcos Jr. has sent mixed signals regarding cooperation with the ICC. While Malacañang has repeatedly stated that Philippine institutions remain functional and capable of addressing allegations domestically, some officials have also indicated that the government may comply with obligations through international police mechanisms if warranted.

- ICC: Duterte to stay detained (2026-05-23 16:14)

(UPDATE) THE International Criminal Court (ICC) has allowed former president Rodrigo Duterte to skip the first status conference in his crimes against humanity case while ordering his continued detention in The Hague, after rejecting defense claims that his deteriorating health and cognitive condition justified his release. In separate rulings issued Friday, Trial Chamber III said Duterte would not be required to personally attend the May 27, 2026 status conference because the proceeding was administrative in nature, but at the same time ruled that the risks of flight and obstruction of justice remained high enough to keep him in ICC custody pending trial. Presiding Judge Joanna Korner and the two other members of the chamber said Article 63(1) of the Rome Statute, which requires an accused person to be present during trial, “does not apply to other hearings such as status conferences, which are essentially administrative in nature.” The chamber also denied a request by victims’ lawyer Gilbert Andres to participate remotely through a secure video link. While other representatives of victims, including the Office of Public Counsel for Victims, will attend and make submissions during the conference, the judges said remote participation for Andres could not be accommodated because “it was not possible to have a secure link with the legal representative in case the use of private sessions would be required” to protect sensitive information. The May 27 conference will be divided into three sessions and is expected to address the projected timetable for trial, pre-trial deadlines, anticipated evidence and witness presentations, disclosure obligations, possible additions to incidents covered by the charges, pre-trial motions, victims’ participation deadlines, and protocols involving witness preparation and vulnerable persons. Although the proceedings will generally be public, the chamber said portions may shift into private session to avoid disclosing sensitive information related to witness protection and security. The court also disclosed that Duterte had changed legal representation after the Chamber's April 30 scheduling order. Lawyers Peter Haynes and Kate Gibson were appointed as Duterte's new counsel and associate counsel, respectively, replacing members of his previous legal team who had earlier been authorized to withdraw from the case. The new defense team, according to the chamber, has already been briefed on pending deadlines and assured the court it would be prepared for the upcoming conference. In a separate unanimous ruling, the same Chamber ordered Duterte to remain detained pending trial, rejecting arguments that his physical frailty and cognitive decline constituted a "prima facie change in circumstances" that warranted reconsideration of his detention. Duterte, 81, surrendered to the ICC on March 12, 2025, after the court issued an arrest warrant against him over alleged crimes against humanity linked to his anti-illegal drugs campaign. The chamber noted that his detention had already been upheld in earlier rulings, including decisions in September 2025 and January 2026 that were later affirmed by the Appeals Chamber. Defense lawyers argued that Duterte's physical condition had worsened, citing "frequent episodes of falls occasioned by a loss of balance" and claiming his impaired short-term memory made him incapable of directing any attempt to interfere with witnesses. But the judges said three court-appointed medical experts examined Duterte and found no basis to alter his detention conditions. The judges also cited Duterte's refusal to attend his confirmation of charges hearing, during which he declared that he did not recognize the ICC's jurisdiction over him. According to the chamber, the statement demonstrated "at its lowest that the accused will not comply with any orders that might be made in respect of a release from custody." The court further pointed to Duterte's "access to vast resources and contacts, including his family and supporters in the Philippines who may assist him in evading justice," concluding that his health issues did not outweigh the risks of flight and interference with proceedings under Article 58 of the Rome Statute. Trial Chamber III said the confirmation of charges against Duterte on April 23, 2026, had, in fact, heightened the possibility that he could abscond. "The confirmation of charges increases the risk that an accused may abscond and is therefore not a change in circumstances that militates in favor of conditional release, but rather one supporting continued detention," the ruling stated. Duterte will remain in ICC custody in The Hague as preparations continue for trial.

- Plunder complaint filed vs Marcoleta, Defensor (2026-05-23 16:13)

INVESTIGATORS from the Office of the Ombudsman filed a complaint for plunder against Sen. Rodante Marcoleta, former lawmaker Michael Defensor, and two other people. In an order dated May 21, 2026, the Office of the Ombudsman gave the respondents 15 days from receipt of its order to submit their counter-affidavits. In the complaint, filed last May 18, the investigators said Marcoleta's acceptance of gifts worth a total of P75 million on three separate occasions when he was a member of the House of Representatives constitutes the crime of plunder. The investigators said that Marcoleta, on Jan. 6, 2025, received P30 million from Defensor, which, they said, was "evidenced by a donor's tax return and a... deposit slip showing that Defensor paid the donor's tax on" Dec. 17, 2025. The investigators said Marcoleta, on Jan. 8, 2025, received P25 million from Joseph Varias Espiritu, which was “evidenced by a donor’ s tax return and a... deposit slip showing that Espiritu paid the donor’ s tax on” Dec. 15, 2025. The investigators said that Marcoleta, on Jan. 9, 2025, received P20 million from Aristotle Baluyut Viray. “Aside from the lack of a clear purpose or pending transaction for which the amounts received may be a consideration, there is no showing that the gifts would still be given were it not for respondent’ s position in government. Hence, it cannot be denied that the P75 million was given by respondents Defensor, Espiritu, and Viray by reason of respondent Marcoleta’ s office,” the investigators said. Defensor, Espiritu, and Viray “belatedly filed the donor’ s taxes for the gifts. However, the payments were merely their afterthought and were intended to invoke good faith and make it appear that the gifts were legally accepted,” the investigators said. Under the National Internal Revenue Code, the return of the donor shall be filed within 30 days after the date the gift was made. “In this case, all the donor’ s taxes for the gifts given in January 2025 were paid in December 2025, or almost 12 months thereafter,” the investigators said. Aside from wanting the Ombudsman’ s office to file a plunder case in court against Marcoleta, Defensor, Espiritu, and Viray, the investigators wanted the same office to file three indirect bribery cases against Marcoleta. “Undoubtedly, respondent Marcoleta should also be charged for indirect bribery for accepting the gifts from the private individuals, which, although not given as consideration for a specific act, were actually given because of his position or potential influence as a public officer,” they said. “To reiterate, while respondent Marcoleta admitted accepting the gifts and characterized them as ‘donations,’ the disposition of which rests upon his discretion, there is no indication as to his relationship with the givers and as to why he would be given such excessive amounts of money. The amounts given were of such magnitude and reason dictates that it can no longer be considered as an ordinary act of generosity, but rather a corrupt act done to gain unwarranted favors from the recipient,” they said. Comelec to cooperate The Commission on Elections (Comelec) has expressed readiness to assist and coordinate with the Office of the Ombudsman in its case against Marcoleta, even as its own motu proprio investigation into the lawmaker has already been dismissed, Comelec Chairman George Erwin Garcia said on Saturday. In a statement, Garcia clarified that the poll body’ s independently initiated inquiry into Marcoleta is no longer active. “The Comelec is ready to help and coordinate with the Ombudsman,” Garcia said in Filipino. “On Comelec’ s end, the motu proprio investigation against Senator Marcoleta has already been dismissed.” He added that the commission has not taken up any move to revive the case. “With regard to reviving the case, Comelec has not yet considered it,” Garcia said, adding that the agency has not received any motion for reconsideration. Garcia issued the statement amid a separate criminal complaint filed before the Office of the Ombudsman against Marcoleta, which recommended the filing of charges for plunder and three counts of indirect bribery over alleged campaign donations totaling P75 million. The complaint stated that the donations exceeded the P50-million threshold for plunder and may constitute indirect bribery, as these were allegedly given by reason of Marcoleta’ s position as a public official.

- Another coup? Minority rallies behind Gatchalian (2026-05-23 16:12)

LESS than two weeks after Sen. Alan Peter Cayetano took over as Senate president, minority lawmakers are discussing yet another leadership shakeup, Sen. Panfilo Lacson confirmed. Speaking during an interview on Storycon aired on One News, Lacson confirmed that the 11-member minority bloc has been discussing plans to reorganize the Senate leadership amid what he described as growing concerns over the institution's credibility and direction. "This much I can say: a change in leadership under the present situation is in the works," Lacson said. Lacson revealed that Sen. Sherwin Gatchalian has emerged as a "compromise candidate" for Senate president, acceptable to both members of the majority and minority blocs. Lacson said the position of former Senate president Vicente Sotto III has become "somewhat untenable," adding that Sotto himself had recognized the political realities surrounding the issue. "The compromise reached was for our preferred candidate for Senate president to be Sen. Sherwin Gatchalian," Lacson said. The minority bloc, however, still lacks the necessary votes to formally challenge the current leadership. Even with support from some senators in the majority coalition, the bloc reportedly needs at least two more votes to initiate proceedings to vacate key Senate posts. Lacson disclosed that several senators from the current majority had expressed interest in joining the minority, but negotiations failed after they backed a different candidate for Senate president. While he declined to identify the senator, political reports said their preferred choice was Sen. Francis Escudero, who was ousted as Senate president by Sotto. "As far as the 11 members of the minority bloc are concerned, whenever we discuss this, we are unanimous on the matter. Our primordial concern is the integrity, dignity, and reputation of the Senate," Lacson said. Shifting alliances Lacson cited recent Senate history to underscore how quickly political alignments can shift within the chamber. On Sept. 8, 2025, several senators joined the then five-member minority bloc to elect Sotto as Senate president, replacing Escudero, who had come under fire for delaying the impeachment trial of Vice President Sara Duterte. Months later, on May 11, four senators from Sotto's 15-member faction crossed over to the minority coalition to install Cayetano as Senate president. Sen. Ronald dela Rosa — despite facing an arrest warrant from the International Criminal Court — emerged from months in hiding to cast the decisive vote for Cayetano. Lacson, who relinquished his position as Senate president pro tempore and chairman of the Blue Ribbon Committee following the leadership transition, said efforts to explore another reorganization are part of normal Senate politics. "There's always a possibility," Lacson said. "In 2025, there were only five of us, yet Tito Sotto became Senate president. Earlier this month, there were only nine of them, while we were 15, but we were replaced. So, everything is possible." In several interviews following the leadership change, Lacson suggested that some senators believed Sotto had failed to adequately "take care" of members of the majority bloc — a phrase widely interpreted in political circles as referring to political accommodation, committee concerns, and allocation-related expectations. Gatchalian: I'm ready In a separate interview with radio dzMM, Gatchalian acknowledged the circulating rumors about his possible ascent to the Senate presidency but declined to elaborate on ongoing discussions. "From my perspective, I have learned a lot from the Senate, especially from handling complicated committees. So, when the time comes, I'm really ready," Gatchalian said in Filipino. Now in his 10th year as senator, Gatchalian has chaired several influential committees, including economic affairs, energy, basic education, ways and means, and finance. Before joining the Senate, Gatchalian served as mayor and district representative of Valenzuela City. He has built a reputation as a meticulous and data-driven legislator, often using charts, presentations and detailed reports during high-profile investigations. He played a prominent role in Senate inquiries into illegal gaming syndicates and the controversial citizenship case involving convicted human trafficker Alice Guo. As chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, Gatchalian also pushed for greater transparency in budget deliberations. Under his leadership, bicameral conference meetings on the national budget were opened to the public, while an online transparency portal was established to provide access to hearing transcripts and budget documents. Pangilinan backs Gatchalian Sen. Francis Pangilinan also voiced support for Gatchalian's potential bid for the Senate presidency. In a statement, Pangilinan said members of the "Solid Bloc 11" unanimously support Gatchalian because of his performance during deliberations on the proposed 2026 National Budget. "He has proven that he can protect the people's money and ensure that public funds go where they are most needed," Pangilinan said. Pangilinan described Gatchalian as "competent, steady, and fair," adding that he could unite a broader reform-oriented coalition within the Senate. Restoring credibility Gatchalian on Saturday said restoring public trust in the Senate would require unity among lawmakers amid growing speculation that he could become the chamber's next Senate president. Gatchalian thanked members of the "SB-11" bloc and other senators backing his possible leadership, saying many lawmakers share the goal of rebuilding the institution's credibility following recent controversies involving the Senate. "I would like to thank the minority bloc and those who have expressed trust and confidence in us," Gatchalian said. "Many people were disappointed by what happened, especially since the Senate is one of the country's highest institutions." The senator acknowledged that recent incidents, including a shooting controversy and public disputes involving senators, have damaged the Senate's image and sparked criticism online. "It is indeed a big challenge," he said. "But this cannot be done by one leader alone. Every senator must work together to restore the good image of our institution." Gatchalian stressed the need for an impartial investigation into the shooting incident, saying accountability is necessary to regain public confidence. "The investigation must be impartial and independent," he said, noting that the Senate and the National Bureau of Investigation are involved in the probe. "If anyone is guilty, they must be held accountable." He also called for stronger communication and coordination among government officials to prevent similar incidents in the future. "These are government officials. They should not be shooting at each other," Gatchalian said. "Even small misunderstandings can escalate if there are no clear lines of communication." The senator also underscored the importance of stability in Senate leadership, warning that frequent leadership changes disrupt committee work and delay important legislation. As political maneuvering continues inside the chamber, observers say the coming weeks may determine whether the current 13-member majority coalition led by Cayetano can withstand another leadership challenge from the increasingly assertive minority bloc.

- Green Card seekers must now apply from their home country (2026-05-23 16:11)

WASHINGTON, D.C. — The Trump administration announced on Friday that most foreigners seeking a Green Card, granting permanent US residency, must apply from their home countries. “From now on, an alien who is in the US temporarily and wants a Green Card must return to their home country to apply, except in extraordinary circumstances,” US Citizenship and Immigration Services (USCIS) spokesman Zach Kahler said in a statement. “Nonimmigrants, like students, temporary workers, or people on tourist visas, come to the US for a short time and for a specific purpose,” Kahler said. “Our system is designed for them to leave when their visit is over,” he said. “Their visit should not function as the first step in the Green Card process.” According to The Washington Post, the United States grants more than 1 million Green Cards each year, and, up until now, more than half of the applicants are already in the United States. Kahler said having Green Card seekers apply from their home nation “reduces the need to find and remove those who decide to slip into the shadows and remain in the US illegally after being denied residency.” He said Green Card applications would be handled by the State Department at US consular offices abroad. President Donald Trump campaigned for the White House on a pledge to expel millions of undocumented migrants, and his administration has also closed several legal pathways to US residency since he took office.

- Filipino students' experiment conducted by NASA astronaut (2026-05-23 16:11)

AN experiment led by students from Rizal Technological University (RTU) was successfully conducted onboard the International Space Station (ISS) by an astronaut from the National Aeronautics and Space Administration (NASA). In a statement on Friday, the Philippine Space Agency (PhilSA) said the Double Gyroscope experiment — developed by third-year Filipino students as part of the 2025 Asian Try Zero-G (ATZG 2025) competition — was performed by astronaut Christopher Williams inside the Kibo module of the ISS on March 24, 2026. Gyroscopes are spinning devices used to measure and maintain direction and balance, essential for spacecraft orientation. The team behind the experiment — Christopher Tumamac, Ryan Andrew Doña, and Rose Ann Cezar — designed the Double Gyroscope to demonstrate principles of spacecraft orientation in microgravity. The students hypothesized that two spinning gyroscopes, placed at opposite ends of a stick, could stabilize or alter the system’s direction depending on their rotational dynamics. The experiment is crucial as it aims to simulate how spacecraft maintain orientation in space, crucial for satellite and spacecraft operations. Williams conducted multiple tests in microgravity to observe these dynamics, with results to be presented at the 2025 ATZG wrap-up session later this year. The experiment was one of 11 finalists selected from countries including Australia, Bangladesh, Japan, Malaysia, Singapore, Taiwan, Thailand, and the United Arab Emirates. These experiments were performed live on the ISS and streamed to the finalists at the Japan Aerospace Exploration Agency (JAXA) Tsukuba Space Center in Ibaraki, Japan. Doña and Tumamac presented their proposal at the Tsukuba Space Center before the experiment’s execution, with results aligning with their hypotheses. The Philippines’ participation in the ATZG competition was facilitated by PhilSA. “We are very thankful for this opportunity given to us by PhilSA, and we hope more Filipino students will apply in the next batches of ATZG to experience proposing experiments in zero gravity and seeing them carried out,” the team said. Since 2022, experiments from Filipino students “have consistently been selected as ATZG finalists and carried out on the ISS by astronauts,” the agency said.

- PNP probes ‘sabungeros’ case meetings (2026-05-23 16:10)

THE Philippine National Police (PNP) has ordered a thorough investigation into alleged “secret meetings” between relatives of missing “sabungeros,” or cockfighting enthusiasts, and dismissed police officers linked to the disappearance case. PNP chief Gen. Jose Melencio Nartatez Jr. said investigators are determining whether other police personnel helped facilitate the meetings following the relief of two officers who became the subject of complaints before the National Police Commission (Napolcom). “Any action outside of what the PNP should do is not only a betrayal of our mandate but also of the trust and confidence of the people we serve. Let us always allow our moral compass to lead the way toward the integrity and professionalism of our organization,” Nartatez said in a statement on Friday. While he said he respects meetings between the parties involved, Nartatez pointed out that police intervention in cases already before the courts is a serious matter that warrants investigation. Napolcom earlier disclosed the alleged involvement of two police officers in facilitating meetings between the families of the victims and dismissed police officers implicated in the case. The PNP on Thursday identified the two relieved officers as former Highway Patrol Group spokesman Lt. Nadame Malang and former Custodial Center warden Maj. Reynaldo Pañebe Jr. Nartatez reminded personnel to observe professionalism and remain within the bounds of their authority, especially in sensitive cases involving ongoing investigations. He also urged individuals with knowledge of the alleged meetings to cooperate with authorities, noting that the PNP’s internal investigation is running parallel with Napolcom’s probe. The PNP assured the public that the investigation would proceed without favoritism and that any officer found to have improperly intervened would face legal consequences.

- 61 OFWs repatriated from Kuwait, Bahrain (2026-05-23 16:09)

THE Department of Migrant Workers (DMW) reported on Saturday that 61 overseas Filipino workers (OFWs) were brought home from Kuwait and Bahrain on Friday. The move was part of the government repatriation process for Filipinos trapped in the ongoing war in the Middle East. The latest batch, composed of 50 OFWs along with their dependents, arrived on board Gulf Air Flight GF154 at the Ninoy Aquino International Airport (NAIA) Terminal 3 at 11:06 a.m. on Friday. Fourteen of them came from Kuwait, while 36 came from Bahrain. They were followed by 11 more OFWs, also from Kuwait, onboard an Etihad Airways commercial flight at NAIA Terminal 3. The repatriated Filipinos were assisted by DMW and Overseas Workers Welfare Administration representatives upon their arrival. “The DMW continues to coordinate with various agencies to strengthen post-repatriation assistance for returning OFWs. This includes profiling, skills assessment, job matching, livelihood assistance and National Reintegration Network Job Fairs in different provinces. With every return of our fellow Filipinos, the government aims to ensure not only their safe return, but also their recovery and a fresh start with their families,” the agency said in a statement in Filipino.

- Cash aid for PWDs pushed (2026-05-23 16:08)

SEN. Joel Villanueva has filed Senate Bill 2096, seeking to provide regular monthly financial assistance to 3 million persons with disabilities (PWDs) in the country. Under the measure, a standing fund would be established under the Department of Social Welfare and Development (DSWD) to grant qualified PWDs a monthly stipend of P2,000, with the amount adjusted periodically to account for inflation.” The responsibility rests on the State to exert greater effort to ensure that no citizen of theirs is left behind, and that individuals with disabilities are adequately supported to overcome the risks and barriers associated with their condition,” Villanueva said. The proposed measure mandates the DSWD to administer the fund in coordination with the National Council on Disability Affairs and organizations representing PWDs. These groups will jointly determine eligibility criteria and oversee implementation guidelines. The bill outlines a two-phase rollout over six years. During the first three years, priority beneficiaries would include children with disabilities, adults with moderate to severe disabilities who face significant barriers and PWDs already covered by existing government assistance programs such as the Social Pension for Indigent Senior Citizens. In the succeeding three years, the program would expand to include all indigent PWDs certified by the DSWD. Besides a monthly cash allowance, the measure provides support for transportation, food and nutrition, maintenance medicines, rehabilitation services, assistive devices and technology, as well as preemployment and employment support services aimed at improving participation in the workforce. To strengthen implementation and monitoring, the bill proposes the creation of a Disability Data Management System linked to the Community-Based Monitoring System, the National ID System and the Department of Health Persons with Disability Registry. The integrated database is intended to provide real-time information on beneficiaries and facilitate subsidized enrollment in PhilHealth. The measure contains penalties against fraudulent enrollment. Individuals found guilty of enrolling ineligible beneficiaries may face fines ranging from P25,000 to P50,000 for a first offense and P50,000 to P100,000 for subsequent violations.” This proposed measure aims to promote inclusion, reduce inequality and empower persons with disabilities to live with dignity and actively participate in nation-building,” Villanueva said. The proposal comes amid growing concerns over the economic vulnerability of households caring for persons with disabilities. Data from the Department of Health as of April 7 showed that approximately 3 million Filipinos are living with some form of disability, including more than 1 million with physical disabilities, over 434,000 with speech impairments, nearly 398,000 with psychosocial disabilities, more than 303,000 with visual disabilities and close to 182,000 with mental disabilities. A joint study by DSWD and United Nations Children’s Fund found that families raising children with disabilities experience poverty rates at least 50 percent higher than the national average. Funding for the program would be sourced from the DSWD’s annual General Appropriations, with allocations required to increase progressively in line with the bill’s “progressive realization” principle aimed at expanding social protection coverage over time.

- Go reaffirms support for sports development (2026-05-23 16:07)

SEN. Bong Go declared his unwavering commitment to grassroots sports development as he extended support and congratulatory messages to a city tournament. Go's representatives will be at the finals and awarding ceremony of the MB Cup in Barangay Commonwealth, Quezon City, today, Sunday. Go thanked Quezon City councilor Mikey Belmonte for organizing the tournament and sustaining community-based sports initiatives. The senator emphasized that sports play a vital role in steering the youth away from illegal drugs, criminality and other harmful influences while promoting discipline, teamwork and healthy living. "I will continue to support sports — if there are sports clubs in your barangay, I will support them. That is one way to keep the youth away from bad habits," Go said in Filipino. "Win or lose, I am proud of all those who play with heart and with the community in mind," he added. Go is the author and co-sponsor of Republic Act 11470, which created the National Academy of Sports (NAS) in New Clark City, Tarlac. The NAS integrates secondary education with a specialized sports curriculum, allowing student-athletes to pursue academic excellence while receiving intensive athletic training. He refiled Senate Bill 413, which aims to institutionalize the Philippine National Games as the country's premier grassroots sports competition. The measure aims to establish a nationwide platform for discovering, developing and supporting Filipino athletic talent from the local level upward.

- De Lima pushes expanded income tax exemption (2026-05-23 16:06)

MAMAYANG Liberal Rep. Leila de Lima has filed House Bill 9172, aiming to increase the income tax exemption ceiling for individual taxpayers from P250,000 to P480,000 yearly income. "The pay received by many of our countrymen is very insufficient, and often nothing is left of it just several days after payday," de Lima said in Filipino in a statement on Friday. "What more when [a] crisis comes, or someone in the family gets sick? One way to lessen the economic challenges confronting many of our countrymen is to implement reforms in income tax exemption that will increase their take-home pay or disposable income," she added. De Lima acknowledged that taxes are a source of funding for critical public services such as education, health care and public safety, but noted that taxpayers are already squeezed dry, hence, the government must ease their burden. "The Tax Reform for Acceleration and Inclusion law introduced a significant change to the Philippine income tax system by exempting individuals earning up to P250,000.00 annually from personal income tax. This reform was designed to ease the tax burden on low- and lower-middle-income earners, allowing them to retain a larger portion of their income. However, once annual earnings exceed this threshold, a progressive task structure applies, with rates starting at 15 percent and rising to 35 percent for top earners. As a result, even modest increases in income can lead to disproportionately higher tax liabilities," she said in the bill's explanatory note. The measure was filed on May 11 and was fully adopted. It was succeedingly filed as Senate Bill 267 by Sen. Bam Aquino.

- MMDA launches hotline 136 for flooding updates (2026-05-23 16:05)

(UPDATE) MOTORISTS traversing Metro Manila during heavy rains can now call Metropolitan Manila Development Authority (MMDA) hotline 136 for real-time road and flood updates this rainy season, according to MMDA General Manager Nicholas Torre III. The hotline is part of the agency's effort to improve emergency response and public access to flood information following the widespread flooding experienced across Metro Manila last year. During a press conference at The Manila Hotel on Friday, Torre told The Manila Times that motorists no longer have to rely solely on Facebook posts to check road conditions or flooded areas during the rainy season. Past MMDA flood advisories usually indicate whether roads are passable to all types of vehicles during flooding incidents. "As part of strengthening Metrobase 136, we improved our social media positioning. That is real time, and if you have questions and want real-time answers, call 136, and we will answer you," Torre said. Pressed if motorists could directly ask whether specific roads are flooded or passable, Torre answered, "Yes. If they want to call about it, we will answer you." "To use the service, motorists need to dial 136 from a mobile phone or landline and ask Metrobase operators about real-time road conditions or potential alternate routes across Metro Manila," he added. The MMDA said the hotline operates 24/7 and is free to call, allowing motorists to seek assistance during emergencies or sudden flooding situations without worrying about load balance. MMDA's Metrobase command center monitors major roads through the no contact apprehension policy CCTV cameras and coordinates with field personnel for on-ground validation and response. Torre said the first major rains in May exposed remaining weaknesses in Metro Manila's flood control system despite the cleanup and inspections before the rainy season, which is why the MMDA is encouraging motorists traversing the capital during heavy rains to maximize hotline 136 and its real-time flood advisories. Torre also urged motorists to monitor the agency's official Facebook page, where flood advisories and road updates are posted in real time.

- QC advises motorists on traffic crawl for Sunday (2026-05-23 16:04)

(UPDATE) MOTORISTS are advised to expect slow-moving vehicular traffic on several major roads in Quezon City early Sunday morning as a tunnel-boring machine for the Metro Manila Subway Project will be transported from Plaridel, Bulacan, to the North Avenue Station site in Quezon City. The Quezon City government said the transport operation will take place this morning, May 24, from 2:45 a.m. to 6 a.m. Traffic slowdown is expected along the following roads: C3 Road – 2:45 a.m. to 3:30 a.m. Araneta Avenue – 3:30 a.m. to 4:30 a.m. Quezon Avenue – 4:30 a.m. to 5:10 a.m. Elliptical Road – 5:10 a.m. to 5:20 a.m. North Avenue – 5:20 a.m. to 6 a.m. City officials said the tunnel boring machine will be used to dig subway tunnels connecting the North Avenue Station and Quezon Avenue Station of the subway project. The city government said personnel from the Traffic and Transport Management Department, and the Department of Public Order and Safety will be deployed to help manage traffic flow during the transport activity. Motorists were advised to take alternative routes to avoid possible delays. The Metro Manila Subway Project is the country's first underground railway system, which is expected to connect Quezon City to Ninoy Aquino International Airport in Pasay City once completed, with several stations planned across Metro Manila.

- CFO offices, airport desks closed May 27 for Eid al-Adha (2026-05-23 16:03)

THE Commission on Filipinos Overseas (CFO) announced the temporary closure of its main and extension offices nationwide on Wednesday, May 27, in observance of Eid al-Adha, or the Feast of Sacrifice. The suspension of operations follows Proclamation 1264, which declares May 27 a regular holiday, one of the most significant Islamic holidays. In an advisory, the CFO said its main office in Pasay City, extension offices in Cebu, Cagayan de Oro, Baguio and Davao, as well as airport desks located in Clark and Ninoy Aquino International Airport Terminals 1 and 3, will close for the duration of the holiday. Affected clients with confirmed appointments scheduled for May 27 via email or phone call to reschedule their transactions. The agency assured the public that regular office operations and services will resume on Thursday, May 28. Also, the CFO advised overseas-bound Filipinos and other clients to monitor official announcements and updates through its website and official social media pages to avoid inconvenience. The CFO is the government agency tasked with promoting and protecting the interests of Filipinos residing or migrating abroad. - The Filipino workers keeping Greenland in business (2026-05-23 16:02)

ILULISSAT, Denmark — Marinel Garciano dislikes winter, and that's tough when it lasts nine months in Ilulissat, Greenland. But she has no regrets about leaving the Philippines to give her children opportunities. Her family is among the roughly 1,200 Filipinos living on the vast Arctic island of 57,000 inhabitants, the largest foreign diaspora in the Danish autonomous territory. "We're just looking for a greener pasture," smiled the 38-year-old, her eyes stealing a glance outside the window. But behind the glass, there was no greenery — just the pristine white of a blizzard enveloping the streets of Ilulissat, north of the Arctic Circle, in the icy month of April. Teleported Marinel was taking a break at the Nuka cafe, where her husband works, flashing a contagious smile despite being tired from work, her long dark hair falling down her back. In 2012, Owie Garciano left the lush landscapes of the Visayas and headed to Greenland for a job as a cook. Marinel and their three children joined him in 2021, amid a tourism boom in the town known for its icebergs. "It was like I had teleported," Marinel recalled. "From the tropical forest to here." At first, she worked in a warehouse, eventually landing a job as a receptionist. Her 15-year-old daughter sometimes helps her, while her eldest son, 18, works as a kitchen hand in a restaurant. The Garcianos are often tired from working so much, but it's for their future: Marinel invests "every penny" in real estate back home to give her children a better life. "I want my kids to not grow up like me. You want to offer them what you didn't have," she said. In between orders, Owie bounced out of the kitchen, gave her a quick kiss, then disappeared again, leaving behind an odor of fried food. Since they never know how long their visas will be renewed for, they don't want to waste any time in Greenland. Marinel keeps meticulous accounts, watching the children's spending closely, even going so far as to confiscate their money "for their future." "In any case, it's too cold to go out and have fun," she said. "And if you drink, you just end up hungover and broke." She squirmed on the red vinyl seat. "I don't know... maybe I'm crazy," she laughed. The next morning, she helped some Filipino friends clean the town's new airport, which is set to open in October. Labor shortage At dawn, life at the Best Western hotel begins to stir. A Thai chambermaid disappears behind a flurry of sheets, a Filipino cook behind a burst of flame. Here, a quarter of the staff is foreign. "We want to hire locals, but it's hard," admitted Manager Arnarissok Moller. "I don't know how we could maintain our high-quality service" without the guest workers, he said. A town of 5,000 inhabitants, Ilulissat has about 50,000 visitors annually. Tourism is growing rapidly, but Greenland, whose population is in decline, has a labor shortage. According to Greenland's employers' association, 5 to 6 percent of workers on the island are Asian, drawn by the tourism sector. Their presence is needed, but sometimes misunderstood. Marinel said she senses it sometimes, in lingering looks and harsh words: "Go home! Go home!" "Like in any country," she said. "We have to learn the language, and adapt to the culture... but it's not that easy." She switches between Greenlandic, Danish and English all day. At her side, her youngest child Neliowi, 5, watched cartoons in English. "In the mornings, I always urge her to speak four or five languages." Not die here Marinel hesitated when the subject of happiness arose. "I'm happy knowing that my children might not end up being poor again," she said. She doesn't want to die in Greenland, she said, hoping to move back to the Philippines before she turns 40. Night began to fall, and the tourists gradually left the Nuka cafe one after another. Outside, the blizzard raged. Marinel pulled on her warm coat with a grimace, saying she dreams of "Trees. Sea. Sand." Owie emerged through the swinging kitchen doors, looking tired. A Filipino kitchen hand greeted him with a bloodstained hand. He was preparing reindeer legs for a panang curry, which has become the "in" dish at Ilulissat's restaurants. In the dining area, a young woman laid the tables for the next day. Ilulissat went to sleep beneath its blanket of snow, but the warm light and strains of Thai pop rock from the Nuka cafe hinted at another life still awake.

- Concerns raised over vape addiction (2026-05-23 16:00)

SEN. Sherwin Gatchalian raised the alarm on Saturday over the growing use of illegal vape products among Filipino youth. He warned that the widespread availability of cheap, smuggled vaping products is harming both public health and government revenue. "Instead of focusing on education, many of our youth are addicted to using vapes because these smuggled products are easy and cheap to buy," Gatchalian said. The senator cited a report by the EU-Asean Business Council and Euromonitor International Ltd. showing that the Philippines lost an estimated P141 billion in government revenues due to the illicit tobacco trade in 2024 and 2025. According to Gatchalian, the continued smuggling of cigarettes and vape products not only deprives the government of much-needed funds but also poses serious risks to consumers because of the uncertain origin and quality of the products being sold illegally. "The continued smuggling of cigarettes and vape products is a major drain on government revenue. More than that, it poses a health risk to our countrymen because we are not sure where these products come from," he added. Gatchalian stressed that the illegal tobacco and vape trade weakens the country's rule of law, fuels institutional corruption and undermines legitimate businesses that comply with government regulations and taxation policies. The senator urged authorities to strengthen border control, intensify enforcement operations against smuggling syndicates and implement stricter measures to prevent minors from accessing vape products. Health advocates have expressed concern over the increasing popularity of vaping among young Filipinos, warning that nicotine addiction may negatively affect learning, behavior and long-term health outcomes.

- Awareness for neurofibromatosis sought (2026-05-23 16:00)

HEALTH experts urged a stronger awareness campaign on Friday for Neurofibromatosis Type 1 (NF1), a rare disease that causes tumors to grow along the nerves. The call was made during the observance of World Neurofibromatosis Day. “Awareness is important because when families, schools and communities understand the condition better, children are given a greater opportunity to thrive,” Dr. Amparo Itto Agrava, pediatric neurologist and neurosonologist said during a briefing led by AstraZeneca Philippines. NF1 is a rare genetic condition that affects 1 in 3,000 people worldwide. It causes tumors to grow along the nerves and can lead to complications involving the skin, bones, eyes and brain, with symptoms such as skin growths and noticeable markings. Health experts explained that the health condition varies from patient to patient, noting that no two patients present the same way. This, they noted, is the primary reason why many patients in the country are left undiagnosed or misdiagnosed. While the disease is not contagious, Agrava said greater understanding can help patients in their journey to recovery — especially from their families. “Support starts with the family. The way parents accept and support their child influences how that child sees themselves,” said Agrava. Dr. Loudella Castillo of the Philippine General Hospital noted that most patients consult multiple specialists over the course of several years before receiving a confirmed diagnosis — delaying not just treatment but access to the right support systems and care. “As health care professionals, one of our responsibilities is helping patients reach the right doctors and support systems. When we address not only the medical needs of patients but also their emotional and psychosocial needs, families become more empowered to participate actively in care and decision-making,” Castillo noted. AstraZeneca Philippines said a new therapeutic option was recently introduced in the country, adding a Filipino patient recently received an approved targeted therapy. Experts and advocates called on policymakers to strengthen and invest in rare disease centers and create clearer referral pathways to serve people with conditions like NF1. “At AstraZeneca, we believe that every patient living with rare diseases deserves access to innovation, dignity and a health care system that sees them,” said Dr. Cyril Tolosa, medical affairs director for biopharmaceuticals and rare disease of AstraZeneca Philippines.

- Marcos declares June as ‘Judiciary Month’ (2026-05-23 16:00)

PRESIDENT Ferdinand Marcos Jr. has declared June as “Judiciary Month,” in time for the commemoration of the 125th founding anniversary of the Supreme Court. The president, through Executive Secretary Ralph Recto, signed Proclamation 1265 on May 21, amending Proclamation 47, which declared the “Judiciary Week.” “There is a need to further strengthen public awareness and appreciation of the Judiciary as a pillar of democratic governance by providing a longer period for the conduct of programs and activities that promote judicial integrity, independence, accountability and efficiency,” the president said.” Extending the observance to the entire month of June will allow the Judiciary greater flexibility in organizing activities and will enable wider participation from stakeholders while ensuring that the celebration remains anchored on the founding anniversary of the Supreme Court,” he added. Marcos directed all agencies and instrumentalities to participate and provide the necessary assistance for the effective implementation of Proclamation 1265. The Supreme Court was established on June 11, 1901, through Act 136 of the Philippine Commission. It had 26 chief justices with Cayetano Arellano as the first chief magistrate. Incumbent Chief Justice Alexander Gesmundo is the 27th head of the judiciary. Associate Justice Raul Villanueva is the latest appointee at the Supreme Court as the 195th associate justice. In celebration of its 125th anniversary, the court has rolled out a series of activities throughout the year under the theme “Supreme Court: 125 Years of Tradition and Innovation.” The commemoration began with a special en banc session on Jan. 14 at the Ayuntamiento de Manila, where the Supreme Court once sat until World War II. An exhibit highlighting its history was also displayed at the Ayuntamiento and at the Supreme Court Main Lobby on Padre Faura Street, Ermita, Manila. Throughout the Judiciary Month, the court said that several commemorative initiatives will be unveiled like historical markers from the National Historical Commission of the Philippines at the Supreme Court New Building, which has served as the court’s principal seat since 1991. The Bangko Sentral ng Pilipinas will present commemorative coins and banknotes, while the Philippine Postal Corp. will issue stamps and other philatelic products honoring the court’s history and legacy. Meanwhile, AF Payments Inc. will release beep cards promoting public awareness of the Judiciary. These will be available to the public, with complimentary cards distributed to Supreme Court employees. Soon to open is the Supreme Court Gift Shop at the court’s main building, offering official merchandise, such as apparel, accessories, drinkware and stationery, including special 125th anniversary items. Another highlight of the occasion is the launch of the Model Supreme Court, an educational program for senior high school students inspired by Model United Nations. It will simulate oral arguments on public interest cases and demonstrate how court decisions are communicated through press briefings. For its inaugural run, participants will come from Manila Science High School, taking on roles such as justices, counsel, amici curiae (friends of the court), Supreme Court spokesman and media representatives. On June 11, Gesmundo will lead a whole-day anniversary celebration at the Supreme Court Quadrangle in Manila, to be attended by incumbent and retired justices, court officials and employees.

- UP Manila develops plant-based mosquito repellent (2026-05-23 16:00)

THE University of the Philippines (UP) Manila has developed a sustainable solution to curb dengue in the country by producing a plant-based mosquito repellent and insecticide technology from natural extracts. According to its latest data, the Department of Health recorded a total of 9,104 dengue cases in January this year — a 73-percent decrease compared to the same period last year. Despite the decline, dengue remains the most common vector-borne viral disease. Dr. Gracia Fe Yu, a former full-time professor from the Department of Biochemistry and Molecular Biology of the UP College of Medicine, led the research behind Mox Oil — short for “Mosquito Away Oil.” The project came into fruition after Yu questioned whether a safer alternative to mosquito repellents was possible to protect children from synthetic components. After years of research, Mox Oil was created. The formulation was proven effective against ants and other insects, making it a versatile household solution. The laboratory tests confirmed that mosquitoes were dying within minutes of exposure to the extract. Skin irritation tests further validated the product’s safety for topical use, making it a suitable option for families seeking natural protection against mosquito bites. The product comes in various forms, including lotions and sprays, catering to diverse consumer needs. Aside from that, the product was developed to support local communities, particularly Indigenous groups like the Aetas, who participate in cultivating medicinal plants and sourcing raw materials. Yu expects to collaborate with stakeholders to commercialize the product. “We are ready for collaboration. We have a potential market here in the Philippines because there are many mosquitoes in the country. Filipinos need Mox Oil, and for this, we are ready to collaborate with you,” Yu said, urging stakeholders to join in manufacturing and commercializing the product.

MANILA, Philippines - The National Bureau of Investigation (NBI) was seeking a specific law in addressing troll farms. "We are probably proposing a bill...because we do not have a specific law," NBI Director Melvin Matibag said in Filipino and English in the Saturday News Forum. "We're always hearing troll farms, that there are troll farms but we do not have legal basis or legal cover to go after troll farms," Matibag said. He said that "we are addressing it. We are in the process of procuring tools to combat this so that we can fight this kind of system."

MANILA, Philippines — The National Bureau of Investigation (NBI) has intensified its manhunt for Sen. Ronald dela Rosa, describing him as “armed and dangerous” as law enforcement units step up efforts to locate the former Philippine National Police (PNP) chief. In a news forum on Saturday, NBI Director Melvin Matibag said the classification was part of standard protocol for individuals being actively sought by authorities, particularly those with prior law enforcement or security background. Matibag said Dela Rosa was being treated with heightened caution to ensure the safety of NBI personnel and other operatives involved in the operation. He urged the public to immediately report any sighting of the senator to authorities, stressing the need for coordination to prevent risks during enforcement actions. The NBI chief also warned that individuals who may assist in allegedly concealing or facilitating evasion could face charges, including obstruction of justice. According to the bureau, tracker teams have been deployed, while additional units have been ordered to assist in the ongoing search and possible service of legal orders.

- House OKs bill expanding VAWC law (2026-05-23 09:07)

THE House of Representatives has approved a bill aiming to expand the Anti-Violence Against Women and Their Children (VAWC) Act. House Bill 8420 hurdled third and final reading Wednesday, with 260 lawmakers voting for its passage. Gabriela Women's Party Rep. Sarah Elago, in a statement posted on Facebook, said that the bill was an important step to amend the law on violence against women and children. In 2004, then-president Gloria Macapagal Arroyo, now Pampanga second district representative, signed the Anti-VAWC Act into law."But while times change, the form that violence takes also changes. So it is time to strengthen and amend the law to address the worsening online abuse, harassment, and other new forms of abuse against women and children," Elago said. The bill defines technology-facilitated violence against women and their children. Elago said the bill recognizes unauthorized dissemination of sensitive images and creation of fake accounts as crimes. Sound clips of a sensitive nature are also covered by the bill. Elago said the bill recognizes online harassment, stalking, and hacking as forms of violence. The lawmaker said the bill has stricter penalties for violators. She said these include a P500,000 fine and imprisonment. The bill gives women 20 days of paid leave which, it said, "shall cover the days when" they have to "attend to medical, legal, and other valid concerns related to the pending case." Under the bill, they are entitled to this benefit during the application of any protection order, investigation, prosecution, and/or trial of the criminal case.

THE Office of the Ombudsman said that its partnership with the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime (UNODC) is as strong as ever. In a courtesy visit, Ombudsman Jesus Crispin Remulla welcomed UNODC Southeast Asia and the Pacific Anti-Corruption Team Lead Annika Wythes and UNODC Philippines National Program Officer Kirbee Tibayan at the Ombudsman central office Thursday. "The strong, growing partnership between the Office of the Ombudsman and the UNODC is vital in advancing anti-corruption efforts, institutional capacity building, and international cooperation," Remulla said. The courtesy call, the Ombudsman's office said in a statement, "served as an opportunity to discuss future areas of collaboration, including advanced digital forensics training, strengthened international cooperation mechanisms, and the possible development of a unified National Anti-Corruption Framework for the Philippines." The Office of the Ombudsman, the statement said, has worked with the UNODC on various technical trainings, workshops, and regional engagements focused on financial investigations, digital evidence, anti-money laundering, corruption prosecution, asset recovery, and international cooperation. "Through partnerships grounded on integrity, innovation, and a shared commitment, the Office of the Ombudsman continues to strengthen its capability to address evolving corruption challenges and uphold public accountability," Remulla said. The Office of the Ombudsman, he added, "recognized the UNODC's continued support for initiatives promoting integrity, ethics, and corruption prevention, including the annual Sikhay Laban sa Korapsyon (Silak) Summit in celebration of International Anti-Corruption Day and Anti-Corruption Month." In 2006, the Philippines ratified the United Nations Convention against Corruption.

MANILA, Philippines — An astronaut of the National Aeronautics Space Administration (NASA) on board the International Space Station (ISS) performed an experiment using a device developed by Filipino students that measured and maintained direction and balance, essential for spacecraft orientation. In a statement on Friday, the Philippine Space Agency (PhilSA) said the Double Gyroscope — developed by third-year students from the Rizal Technological University (RTU) as part of the 2025 Asian Try Zero-G (ATZG 2025) competition — was tested by Christopher Williams inside the Kibo module of the ISS on March 24, 2026. The students hypothesized that spinning the double gyroscopes in opposite directions would create a stabilizing effect, but slight differences in their motion could gradually alter the system's orientation. Williams conducted multiple tests in microgravity to observe these dynamics, with results to be presented at the 2025 ATZG wrap-up session later this year.

MANILA, Philippines — National Bureau of Investigation (NBI) Director Melvin Matibag said on Saturday that the agency was prepared to enforce any additional arrest warrants that may be issued by the International Criminal Court (ICC) in connection with the crimes against humanity case involving former president Rodrigo Duterte. Matibag issued the statement after confirming that the NBI had received information indicating that more individuals could face arrest warrants from the ICC in the coming days. Matibag said the bureau's readiness remained paramount, stressing that law enforcement agencies will act regardless of the identities of individuals involved. "We are always ready to enforce and serve the warrants. It doesn't matter who it is," Matibag said. "If there are additional warrants, we are ready to enforce them and serve them." He added that the agency would not go into further discussion regarding possible warrants or the identities of individuals allegedly linked to the case, citing the need for operational discretion.

MANILA, Philippines — The International Criminal Court (ICC) granted former president Rodrigo Duterte's request to skip the first status conference in his crimes against humanity case, while denying a victims' lawyer to participate remotely. In an order issued Friday, Trial Chamber III confirmed that Duterte would not be required to attend the May 27, 2026 status conference, describing the proceeding as administrative in nature. "The Accused wishes to waive his right to appear before the Chamber on 27 May 2026 and fully trusts his legal team to address the procedural matters listed," the defense said in a request submitted by email on May 21, which the Chamber subsequently approved. However, Presiding Judge Joanna Korner and the other members of the Chamber directed Duterte's legal team to submit a signed written waiver from the former president no later than May 25 at 12 p.m., in compliance with statutory requirements. The Chamber noted that Article 63(1) of the Rome Statute, which requires an accused person to be present during trial, "does not apply to other hearings such as status conferences which are essentially administrative in nature." The judges also denied a request by victims' lawyer Gilbert Andres to attend the conference through a secure video link. While other members of the victims' legal team, including the Office of Public Counsel for Victims, will attend and make submissions on behalf of victims, the Chamber said remote participation could not be accommodated because "it was not possible to have a secure link with the Legal Representative in case the use of private sessions would be required" to protect sensitive information. The order further disclosed that Duterte has changed his legal representation since the Chamber issued its scheduling order on April 30. Lawyers Peter Haynes and Kate Gibson have been appointed as Counsel and Associate Counsel, respectively, replacing Duterte's previous legal representatives who were allowed to withdraw from the case. According to the Chamber, the new defense team has been informed of all pending deadlines and assured the court it would be prepared to attend the status conference. The May 27 conference will be conducted in three sessions and is expected to tackle matters related to the projected start of trial, pre-trial deadlines, anticipated evidence and witness presentations, disclosure obligations, possible additions to incidents covered by the charges, pre-trial motions, victims' participation deadlines, and protocols concerning witness preparation and vulnerable individuals. Although the proceedings will generally be held in public, the Chamber said private sessions may be ordered when necessary to avoid disclosing sensitive information involving witness protection and security. The judges added that additional matters raised by parties and participants may be addressed in future status conferences ahead of trial.

- Comelec ready to assist Ombudsman in Marcoleta case even after terminating own probe
(2026-05-23 05:03)

MANILA, Philippines — The Commission on Elections (Comelec) expressed readiness to assist and coordinate with the Office of the Ombudsman in its case against Sen. Rodante Marcoleta, even as its own investigation into the lawmaker has been dismissed, Comelec Chairman George Erwin Garcia said on Saturday. In a statement, Garcia clarified that the poll body's independent inquiry against Marcoleta was no longer active. "The Comelec is ready to help and coordinate with the Ombudsman," Garcia said in Filipino. "On Comelec's end, the motu proprio investigation against Senator Marcoleta has already been dismissed." He added that the commission had not discussed any move to reopen the case. "With regard to reviving the case, Comelec hasn't thought about it yet," he said, adding that the agency has also not received any Motion for Reconsideration. Garcia's remarks came amid a separate criminal complaint filed before the Office of the Ombudsman against Marcoleta, which recommended charges for plunder and three counts of indirect bribery over alleged campaign donations totaling P75 million. According to the complaint filed by the field investigation bureau of the Office of the Deputy Ombudsman for Luzon on May 18, Marcoleta allegedly received campaign contributions from former representative Mike Defensor and two other individuals amounting to P30 million, P25 million, and P20 million, respectively, in January 2025. The complaint stated that the donations exceeded the P50-million threshold for plunder and may constitute indirect bribery, as they were allegedly received by reason of Marcoleta's position as a public official. It also alleged that the contributions were not properly declared in his Statement of Assets, Liabilities, and Net Worth (SALN) and Statement of Contributions and Expenditures (SOCE), noting discrepancies between declared cash holdings and the reported P75 million in donations. The complainants further argued that Marcoleta's failure to disclose the alleged contributions could expose him to administrative and criminal liabilities under the Code of Conduct and Ethical Standards for Public Officials. The Office of the Ombudsman has ordered Marcoleta, along with his alleged donors, to submit counter-affidavits within 15 days, after which complainants may file their reply. Meanwhile, Garcia said the Comelec had previously concluded that no election offense was committed, citing that the alleged donations were made before the start of the official campaign period for the 2025 elections. He noted that under a 2009 Supreme Court ruling, liability for election offenses applies only once the campaign period begins. In March, Comelec's Political Finance and Affairs Department had terminated its own investigation into the matter. Garcia reiterated that while the poll body was no longer pursuing its own investigation, it remained open to coordinating with the Ombudsman if needed in connection with the case.

- ICC orders continued detention of Duterte, rejects health concerns (2026-05-23 04:46)

MANILA, Philippines — The International Criminal Court (ICC) has ordered the continued detention of former president Rodrigo Duterte pending trial, rejecting defense arguments that his declining health and cognitive impairment warranted release. In a unanimous decision, Trial Chamber III found that the confirmation of charges against Duterte — which includes crimes against humanity over his controversial "war on drugs" — actually increased the risk that he might abscond or obstruct justice. "The confirmation of charges increases the risk that an accused may abscond and is therefore not a change in circumstances that militates in favour of conditional release, but rather one supporting continued detention," the three-judge panel wrote. Duterte, 81, was surrendered to the court on March 12, 2025, pursuant to an arrest warrant issued days earlier. His detention has been upheld in multiple rulings since then, including a September 2025 interim release decision and a January 2026 review — both confirmed by the Appeals Chamber. The defense had argued that Duterte's physical condition and cognitive capacities represented a "prima facie change in circumstances" meriting reconsideration. Lawyers described "frequent episodes of falls occasioned by a loss of balance" and said his impaired short-term memory meant he "is not capable of remembering sufficient details for the purpose of instructing others to tamper with witnesses." However, the Chamber noted that three court-appointed medical experts had examined Duterte, and their reports "do not contain any information that warrants modifying the Accused's detention." Presiding Judge Joanna Korner, along with Judges Keebong Paek and Nicolas Guillou, also pointed to Duterte's refusal to attend his confirmation hearing, during which he stated: "I do not recognise the jurisdiction of the International Criminal Court over my person." The court said that statement demonstrated "at its lowest that the Accused will not comply with any orders that might be made in respect of a release from custody." Citing Duterte's "access to vast resources and contacts, including his family and supporters in the Philippines who may assist him in evading justice," the Chamber found that his health issues did "not constitute factors which outweigh the risks" of flight or obstruction. The risks under Article 58(1)(b)(i) and (ii) of the Rome Statute — concerning flight and interference with proceedings — have increased, the court said, while it saw "no change in circumstances" regarding other risks. Duterte will remain in ICC custody in The Hague. The trial is expected to proceed following the April 23, 2026, confirmation of charges against him.

- Want to know where flooded roads are? MMDA's 136 hotline will tell you (2026-05-23 02:43)

MANILA, Philippines — Motorists traversing Metro Manila during heavy rains can now directly call MMDA hotline 136 for real-time road and flood updates, especially this rainy season, according to Metropolitan Manila Development Authority General Manager Nicholas Torre III. The hotline is part of the agency's efforts to improve emergency response and public access to information following the widespread flooding experienced across Metro Manila last year. During a press conference at The Manila Hotel on Friday, Torre told The Manila Times that motorists no longer have to rely solely on Facebook posts to check road conditions or flooded areas. Past MMDA flood advisories usually indicate whether roads are passable to light vehicles, not passable to light vehicles, or not passable to all types of vehicles during flooding incidents. "As part of strengthening Metrobase 136, we improved our social media positioning. That is real-time, and if you have questions and want real-time answers, call 136 and we will answer you," Torre said. Asked if motorists could directly ask whether specific roads were flooded or passable, Torre answered: "Yes. If they want to call about it, we will answer you." To use the service, motorists simply need to dial 136 from a mobile phone or landline and ask Metrobase operators about real-time flood conditions, road passability, or alternate routes across Metro Manila. The MMDA said the hotline was 24/7 and free. The agency's Metrobase command center monitors major roads through NCAP CCTV cameras and coordinates with field personnel for on-ground validation and response. Torre said the first major rains in May exposed remaining weaknesses in Metro Manila's flood control system despite pre-rainy season cleanup and inspections, which is why the MMDA is encouraging motorists traversing the capital during heavy rains to maximize hotline 136 and its real-time flood advisories. The MMDA chief also urged motorists to monitor the agency's official Facebook page, where flood advisories and road passability updates were posted in real time.

- FDA staff blindsided by move allowing more e-cigarettes and nicotine pouches onto US market (2026-05-22 20:56)

WASHINGTON — Senior officials in the Food and Drug Administration's tobacco center were blindsided by a recent decision that opens the door to allowing more unauthorized electronic cigarettes and nicotine pouches onto the U.S. market, The Associated Press has learned. The guidelines, posted days before former FDA Commissioner Marty Makary resigned, will allow companies to launch certain nicotine-based products before they've been fully vetted by regulators. Some FDA officials tasked with enforcing vaping regulations were not consulted on the changes and only learned of them the night before the document was published earlier this month, according to two staffers who spoke to the AP on condition of anonymity to discuss confidential agency matters. The document's sudden appearance sparked internal confusion about how the policy came about and who authorized it, the staffers said. In recent days, agency officials have convened hourslong meetings grappling with how to implement the six-page memo, which breaks with longstanding FDA policy requiring scientific verification of health benefits for smokers before any new products are introduced. It's highly unusual for the FDA to draft new policies without input from the staffers who oversee them. "It begs the question of whether the true subject matter experts may have actually opposed this policy and were ordered to do it anyway," said Mitch Zeller, who retired as the FDA's tobacco director in 2022. "And that goes to the ability of the public to have trust and faith in institutions like FDA." The vaping guidelines bypassed a federally required period that allows for public comment and revisions. Instead, the FDA published them as a finalized policy hours after media reports surfaced that President Donald Trump had approved a plan to fire Makary. He resigned from the FDA last week following months of complaints from industry lobbyists close to the White House. A Health and Human Services spokesperson did not address the origins of the guidance in a written statement. "This approach strengthens protections against youth nicotine addiction while supporting evidence-based alternatives for adult smokers seeking to move away from combustible tobacco products,” Andrew Nixon said in a statement. Messages seeking comment from Makary were not immediately returned Friday. FDA eyes new approach to vaping flavors. Most health researchers agree that e-cigarettes are significantly less harmful than traditional cigarettes, and the products have been promoted in the U.K. and other European countries as an alternative for smokers. In the U.S., the FDA has struggled to police the market for over a decade. The agency has authorized vaping products from five companies while rejecting millions of other applications, mainly due to the presence of fruit, candy and other sweet flavors that were deemed appealing to kids. And yet, unauthorized vapes are widely available. But recent changes in Washington and across the U.S. reflect a shifting landscape. Underage vaping among U.S. teenagers has fallen to its lowest level in more than 10 years, following the disruptions of the pandemic and new state and federal restrictions. Trump came to power last year after vowing to “save” the vaping industry. Major tobacco companies, such as Reynolds American and Altria, have contributed millions to political action committees supporting Trump and other administration priorities, including Trump's inauguration and his proposed White House ballroom. Both companies have invested heavily in e-cigarettes and nicotine pouches, in addition to cigarettes. Despite the influence campaign, vaping issues took a backseat at FDA under Makary. On rare occasions when Makary addressed e-cigarettes, he voiced skepticism about the data showing declining underage use. Even as FDA staffers were poised to shift course on flavors, Makary and other agency leaders intervened. In February, one of Makary's deputies blocked an FDA decision that would have authorized the first fruit-flavored vapes, according to internal memos later released by the agency. FDA reviewers had determined the products were unlikely to be used by children when combined with digital age-verification technology. The mango- and blueberry-flavored products were finally OK'd during Makary's last full week heading the FDA, just days before the agency posted the new guidelines allowing unauthorized nicotine products. Under the guidance, the FDA is supposed to publish a list of e-cigarettes and pouches that are not yet authorized but will be subject to “enforcement discretion,” meaning they can be sold without regulators targeting them for removal. While there is no public list of products that might qualify, the policy is expected to allow for new flavors that had previously been blocked by regulators. “What we're seeing is a broader opening up and responsiveness to flavored products by the agency both in terms of a stronger appetite for authorization but also less appetite to take enforcement action against flavored products,” said Brian King, former FDA tobacco director now with the Campaign for Tobacco-Free Kids. US stores are already packed with illegal flavored vapes. While FDA's new approach breaks with precedent, it may have little impact on the flavors already available at gas stations, vape shops and convenience stores. The U.S. market has been flooded for years by unauthorized vapes containing mango, gummy bear, strawberry and dozens of other flavors. These disposable e-cigarettes filled the vacuum left by Juul when it pulled its high-nicotine flavored products from the market, after they became ubiquitous in U.S. schools beginning around 2017. Currently, the company only sells FDA-authorized e-cigarettes in tobacco and menthol flavors. Juul and other companies now see the chance to directly compete with disposable Chinese vapes, which by some estimates account for 80% of U.S. sales. “The choice we face is not whether flavored vaping products should be sold in the U.S. They already are,” said Robyn Gougelet, a Juul vice president. “The choice is whether those products should be regulated and responsibly marketed — or illegal, untested, and smuggled into the country.” Rather than targeting flavors, the FDA said its new enforcement approach will focus on vapes with specific youth-appealing features, such as designs that resemble children’s toys. “The reality is they’re just deluged by illegal products coming across the border,” said Jonathan Foulds, a tobacco-addiction specialist at Penn State University. “So they’re making it clear what should be common sense: ‘We’re going to focus on the worst actors.’” New policy may create winners and losers among vaping firms. It’s far from clear whether FDA’s new approach will be embraced by the vaping industry at large, which includes multinational tobacco companies alongside hundreds of smaller companies selling imported devices from China. As written, the guidance suggests only e-cigarettes that are under “scientific review” will qualify to launch without FDA authorization. Only a small number of applications typically reach that stage, which requires detailed health data on smokers who switch to the new product, King noted. “This is certainly going to benefit the larger tobacco companies, which have the resources to get far enough into the application review process and thus won’t be prioritized for enforcement,” King said. Lobbyists for smaller companies say it’s too early to tell whether the policy will help or hinder their clients, but they fear being left behind. “The big companies would love nothing more than to see their largest swath of competitors out of the marketplace,” said Tony Abboud of the Vapor Technology Association.

MADRID — Alvaro Arbeloa confirmed Friday he would leave his role as Real Madrid coach at the end of a trophyless season. “Yes,” Arbeloa said at a press conference when asked to confirm that he would not be coaching the team next season, amid widespread reports that veteran manager Jose Mourinho is returning to the club. Los Blancos host Athletic Bilbao on Saturday at the Santiago Bernabeu in their final La Liga match of a turbulent campaign. Real Madrid president Florentino Perez appointed Arbeloa to replace Xabi Alonso in January and he is set to be replaced himself by Portuguese veteran Mourinho. Spaniard Arbeloa said he would not work as a member of Mourinho’s staff if the Portuguese coach is appointed as his successor. “Mou has a fantastic technical team, he’s got good people around him, if he comes to Madrid he will come with his team,” said Arbeloa. “There’s no chance that I would be with him. Then, my future... from Monday I’ll think about that.” Arbeloa, who played at Madrid between 2009-2016 and later coached there at youth level said he hoped this match was a “see you later” rather than goodbye. “I hope it’s a see you later... I’ve always considered this my home, I’ve belonged to Madrid for 20 years in various roles,” said Arbeloa. “It will be my last game this season as coach of Real Madrid, I don’t know if it will be the last game of my life as coach of Real Madrid.” “We never know. I’ll try and enjoy it and try to get the win.”

- Kate 'edging' back into foreign trips after illness Prince William (2026-05-22 19:51)

LONDON, United Kingdom — Britain's Prince William on Friday said his wife Catherine, popularly known as Kate, was "edging herself back into doing more" overseas trips following her cancer diagnosis in 2024. William, 43, told Heart radio's breakfast show that the Princess of Wales was "buzzing" after her visit to Italy earlier this month, her first foreign visit since the diagnosis. "She's been through so much in the last couple of years, particularly, and she'd been looking forward to the Italian trip a lot, and so I'm really glad it went really well." Kate, 44, announced she was in remission from cancer in January 2025 and has gradually returned to public duties since then. "She's an amazing mum, an amazing wife, and literally our family couldn't cope without her," William told the radio show, speaking from the Isles of Scilly off the Cornish coast in southwest England. The father-of-three spoke about parenting as well, including the school run for his children which he said "can be" chaotic. "Charlotte, Louis, if you're listening, make sure you're on time, please make sure (you're) not fighting over who's listening to what this morning," William said, addressing his two youngest children. His eldest son, George, 12, was "boarding" on Thursday night, William said. The heir-to-the-throne revealed that jam sandwiches were kept in the car for the youngest Louis, 8, to snack on. "He'll leave jam fingerprints throughout the car, which is really helpful," said William. William has been giving more personal interviews recently, and last year revealed that he and Catherine have a phone ban to protect their children. The prince, who admitted he is "definitely not a morning person", said his breakfast of choice is "eggs on sourdough". He said he enjoyed "motivational" music and "loved dance music." Prince William also spoke about seeing Aston Villa, the football team he supports, win the UEFA Europa League this week in Istanbul. "I got really into the moment, and you know, I've been following Aston Villa most of my life. And so it was a huge moment for all Villa fans."

- NTF-ELCAC: No massacre in Toboso, Reds given chance to surrender but they refused (2026-05-22 19:47)

MANILA, Philippines — The National Task Force to End Local Communist Armed Conflict (NTF-ELCAC) on Friday rejected claims that the April 19 encounter in Toboso, Negros Occidental was a massacre, insisting that New People's Army (NPA) members were repeatedly urged to surrender but refused. In a statement, NTF-ELCAC Executive Director Ernesto Torres Jr. said all 19 individuals killed in the incident were combatants who died during a legitimate armed engagement with government forces. "Attempts to portray some of the fatalities as civilians, farmers, or researchers have collapsed under the weight of physical evidence, forensic findings, crime scene investigation reports, and even admissions from the CPP-NPA itself," Torres said. Citing 3rd Infantry Division commander Maj. Gen. Michael Samson, Torres said government troops encountered armed individuals during the April 19 clash and had reason to treat them as combatants. "Government forces continuously called on members of the armed group to surrender because no one wanted these encounters to happen," Torres said.

"Tragically, opportunities for peace were repeatedly ignored and rejected even during the lull in combat," he added. Torres also addressed the cases of Alysa Alano and RJ Ledesma, saying that regardless of prior identity, profession, or affiliation, individuals found armed and actively participating in an encounter are considered combatants in that operational context. Among the evidence cited by Torres were findings from Police Col. Reynaldo Calaoa of the Regional Forensic Unit–Negros Island Region, showing that 11 of the 19 fatalities tested positive for gunpowder residue. Torres noted that the findings were significant given that several bodies were exposed to seawater and high tide for nearly 24 hours before recovery. "Surface gunshot residue is highly vulnerable to environmental degradation. Even ordinary washing can substantially reduce detectable residue," he said. He added that despite prolonged saltwater immersion, wave action, sand abrasion, and movement during recovery operations, a majority still tested positive for residue. “That is powerful forensic evidence supporting the reality of an active firefight,” Torres said. He stressed that negative paraffin test results do not prove an individual never fired a weapon, explaining that residue may no longer have been detectable by the time tests were conducted. Torres said the mixed findings—11 positive and eight negative—were not unusual under uneven environmental conditions, including varying levels of submersion, clothing protection, and tidal movement. He pointed to the case of Roger Fabillar, alias “Jong,” identified as commander of the Northern Negros Front and acknowledged by the NPA as one of its slain members, who tested negative for gunpowder residue. “If anyone would insist that a negative paraffin finding automatically means non-participation in combat, then that argument immediately runs into serious difficulty,” Torres said. On Thursday, Police Brig. Gen. Dennis Wenceslao presented Scene of the Crime Operatives (SOCO) findings showing investigators recovered more than 20 long and short firearms, ammunition, expended cartridges, communication equipment, backpacks, hammocks, medical supplies, and other war materiel from the encounter site. Torres said at least 10 of the 19 fatalities had also been publicly identified and claimed by the NPA as members of the organization. Among them were Fabillar and Josel Guimang, initially presented by the NPA as an 18-year-old fighter but later found to be only 17 years old. Torres said three child combatants were recovered from the site, raising concerns over the NPA’s alleged recruitment and use of minors in combat, which he said violated local and international humanitarian laws. He also cited observations from forensic pathologist Dr. Raquel Fortun indicating no signs of close-range firing among the fatalities, which he said supported the conclusion that the deaths resulted from a legitimate armed encounter. Torres further criticized what he described as shifting narratives from the CPP-NPA, which initially acknowledged 10 members killed, then 13, before later attempting to portray some as civilians. “But changing numbers do not change facts,” he said. He also questioned calls by communist front organizations seeking “justice for all 19,” including individuals already identified by authorities and acknowledged by the NPA as members of the armed movement. “Justice must rest on facts and truth, not on selective narratives,” Torres said. “The totality of evidence now speaks clearly: physical evidence, forensic examination, scene investigation, recovered war materiel, and admissions from the armed movement itself all point in one direction. The Toboso incident was not a massacre. It was a legitimate armed engagement,” he added..

- Tennis players 'ignored', want 'respect' in Grand Slam pay dispute (2026-05-22 19:45)

PARIS — World number eight Taylor Fritz said Friday that tennis players' concerns about prize money have been "ignored" by Grand Slam tournament organisers, leading to their planned protest at the French Open, which Jannik Sinner says is about "respect". The bulk of the world's top 10 will limit their media duties at the clay-court major, which starts at Roland Garros on Sunday, due to perceived low prize money. Players have claimed they are currently only paid 15 percent of the revenue from the Slams, asking for 22 percent instead. "It's not about wanting more money. It's about just wanting what's fair," Fritz told reporters in Paris. "We have been pretty patient and mild with, I'd say, our requests, and I think all of us feel it's a bit disrespectful to just be ignored when the sport is the healthiest, when I think there is a very fair partnership and open dialogue between the players and the tournaments."Sinner reiterated his call, initially made earlier this month in Rome, for organisers to show more respect to the players."I think it's something good because without us events are not possible to play," said the world number one and red-hot French Open title favourite."It's about the respect. We have to wait for over a year for just a small response... the best 10 players -- it's not nice."Women's world number one Aryna Sabalenka also said at the Italian Open that players might have to boycott the sport's four biggest tournaments -- the Australian, French and US Open and Wimbledon -- to "defend our rights".Fritz says a boycott has not been seriously discussed by the players, but did not rule out that it could become an option in the future."Something does have to change if we are ignored, so that's a conversation to have, I think," said the American when asked about a potential boycott."Right now I'm not ready to start tossing that around, because I want to really mean it if I'm going to say it."Sabalenka said her decision to protest was in order to help players lower down the rankings."It's not easy to live in this tennis world with the percentage that we are earning," said the Belarusian."But as a world number one, I feel like I have to stand up and fight for those players, for lower-level players, especially those who are coming back after injuries, the upcoming next generation."Reigning women's champion Coco Gauff was timing the length of her press conference and said: "This is the first real point of action that we've done. Yeah, I think I'm proud that we were all able to get on the same page."Novak Djokovic said he was not involved in the protest.- 'They don't hear you' -French Open tournament director Amelie Mauresmo said Thursday that Roland Garros organisers "would not budge" on the issue of prize money.Russia's Andrey Rublev, a 10-time Grand Slam quarter-finalist, hit out at a lack of communication from tournament organisers when players have raised their concerns."They don't hear you. They don't answer," said the 28-year-old."When you send the mail in, no one responds to official mail for months, it's like -- and we are doing the same thing."Come on, guys. We are together, or you completely don't care that much that you cannot even communicate."Iga Swiatek confirmed she was also taking part in the protest, for which players will speak to the media for no longer than 15 minutes, a limit symbolically chosen to represent the 15 percent of revenue they say they receive."We have nothing against media, obviously," said the four-time women's French Open champion."I feel like we will do more when the tournament will do more for us."Women's world number eight Mirra Andreeva believes the players are "united" in the decision to put pressure on the Grand Slams."I do think that we have a reason behind it, and I do think that all of us are, as I said, united and all of that," said the 19-year-old.The 2026 French Open singles champions will win 2.8 million euros ($3.3 million) this year, up from 2.55 million euros last year.The prize money on offer is larger than at the Australian Open, but smaller than at Wimbledon and the US Open.

- Everest record-holder Kami Rita Sherpa urges limit on climbers as crowds swell on the peak (2026-05-22 18:13)

KATHMANDU, Nepal — A renowned Mount Everest guide who this week scaled the peak a record 32nd time urged authorities on Friday to limit climbers on the summit.The number of climbers making the ascent on the 8,849-meter (29,032-foot) peak from the Nepalese side is higher this season because China has closed the route from Tibet. Everest can be scaled from either the southern side in Nepal or the northern side in China. On Wednesday, 274 climbers reached the summit, the highest number on a single day from the Nepal side. A total of 494 climbers have been issued permits by Nepal's mountaineering authorities and an equal number Sherpa guides are accompanying them. "It was very crowded this year compared to last year," Kami Rita Sherpa told reporters at Kathmandu airport after flying back from the mountain. "There is a need for authorities to control this number." Climbers only get a few windows of good weather to make their attempt on the summit. A large number of people waiting in a fixed rope line they are all clipped into increases the risks of a traffic jam and exposes the climbers to increased hours of harsh weather. Kami Rita's closest competitor, Pasang Dawa Sherpa, scaled the peak for the 31st time on Friday, which was his second successful ascent this week. Kami Rita, 56, first climbed Everest in 1994, and has been making the trip nearly every year since. He is one of many Sherpa guides whose expertise and skills are vital to the safety and success of foreign climbers aspiring to stand on top of the mountain each year. His father was among the first Sherpa guides. In addition to Everest, Kami Rita has climbed other peaks that are among the world's highest, including K2, Cho Oyu, Manaslu and Lhotse.

- Matthew Perry's family trusted his assistant to help keep him sober. He instead helped him overdose (2026-05-22 17:56)

LOS ANGELES — Matthew Perry paid Kenneth Iwamasa $150,000 a year to be his live-in personal assistant. His role for the "Friends" star would expand to drug messenger, addiction enabler and de facto doctor, according to court filings. Iwamasa injected Perry with the doses of ketamine that would prove fatal on Oct. 28, 2023, and then left the actor to run errands. He returned to find Perry dead in the Jacuzzi. The ex-assistant became the first to reach a plea deal of five people indicted in connection with Perry's death. On Wednesday, he'll become the last to be sentenced. Prosecutors are asking for a prison term of three years and five months. That's more than the 2 1/2-year sentence of the doctor who sold Iwamasa ketamine and taught him to inject it into Perry, but far less than the 15-year sentence of the admitted drug dealer who sold Iwamasa the final doses. Iwamasa, 60, pleaded guilty to conspiracy to distribute ketamine resulting in death and became the case's most important witness in the indictments of his four co-defendants. That is virtually certain to lead to a lighter sentence. Family members blame the assistant above all others "I have no sympathy for Kenny Iwamasa," Perry's younger sister Caitlin Morrison wrote in a letter to the judge. "I wasn't there the night my brother died. I cannot read Kenny's thoughts. I will never know if the lethal dose of ketamine was only lethal by accident. But I know that when Kenny left the house, he was doing one of two things. He was either escaping from something he knew he had done or he was willfully abandoning a vulnerable person in a dangerous situation." Perry's mother Suzanne Morrison wrote that her son and the family had known Iwamasa for decades, and that relatives were relieved when Perry, who'd had recurring struggles with addiction throughout his life, hired the assistant in 2022. "Mathew trusted Kenny. We trusted Kenny. Kenny's most important job — by far — was to be my son's companion and guardian in his fight against addiction," she wrote. "We trusted a man without a conscience, and my son paid the price." Iwamasa's lawyers argued that he was an employee doing the bidding of his boss. In a presentencing filing, they said Iwamasa had "a particular vulnerability to the relationship dynamic which he fell into with the victim. In short, he could not 'simply say no.' That inability had tragic consequences." Suzanne Morrison said Iwamasa knew he could call any family member should Perry start making drug demands, and his job would be safe. Family disgusted by Iwamasa's behavior following Perry's death, Perry's mother wrote, "When he had killed my son, he kept a sharp eye on me. He sent me songs, he drew a little map to help me find my way around the cemetery. If he saw a rainbow — one of Matthew's favorite things — he would call me. He insisted on speaking at Matthew's funeral. He clung to me and the family as if he was somehow the good guy who tried to save Matthew." She said Iwamasa expected a financial payout, and when it was clear he wouldn't get one, he threatened legal action. Iwamasa did speak at the funeral, which would later leave the family disgusted. "The person responsible for my brother's death stood up and addressed the people who loved him most," another sister, Madeline Morrison, wrote. "That is like a cruel joke I still struggle with. He didn't just take my brother's life — he tainted our final memories of saying goodbye." Truth about the ketamine was slow to come out. The LA County Medical Examiner found that ketamine, a surgical anesthetic that has become widely used for other purposes both legal and illegal, was the primary cause of Perry's death. Drowning was a secondary cause. On the day of Perry's death, Iwamasa gave police a list of all the medications Perry was taking, but he left off ketamine and said nothing about the injections, prosecutors said. After investigators served a search warrant on the house in January 2024, that began to change, and he would slowly admit his role in Perry's death. Iwamasa said he had been giving Perry six to eight injections of ketamine per day in the last days of his life, and that Perry had told him, "Shoot me up with a big one" on the day he died. Iwamasa said he had worked with middleman Erik Fleming, who was sentenced to two years in prison May 13, to get drugs from dealer Jasveen Sangha. In his first text to Fleming, Iwamasa said, "Alfred here batmans butler. He said I can text you directly." Madeline Morrison wrote that when the truth emerged, "It felt like my brother died all over again. Everything I believed about the day he died—everything Kenny told us—was a lie. I had to relive Matthew's death from an entirely new and devastating perspective." Iwamasa pleaded guilty in August 2024 before the case became public. Wednesday will be his first court appearance since. Perry, who died at 54, became one of the biggest stars of his generation as Chandler Bing on "Friends," NBC's culture-changing sitcom that ran from 1994 to 2004. "He was my Matso, my Manew," his mother wrote. "He was, in spite of all we went through, my heart and my soul."

I have not yet decided what I will do for the next elections", he said in Filipino and English at the Kapihan ng Samahang Plaridel. Leviste, 33, is on his first term as a congressional representative.

- Bato dela Rosa still in PH as police deploy tracker teams (2026-05-22 16:15)

(UPDATE) TRACKER teams from the Philippine National Police (PNP) have joined the nationwide manhunt for Sen. Ronald “Bato” Dela Rosa. PNP chief Gen. Jose Melencio Nartatez Jr. on Friday said the specialized units were deployed after the Department of Justice (DOJ) gave the green light for Dela Rosa’s arrest. Nartatez said the teams have orders to apply maximum tolerance and professionalism during the manhunt. “Our mandate is clear, but I am emphasizing to our personnel that operational discipline is paramount. There will be no shortcuts, and every movement will be heavily aligned with existing protocols to protect constitutional rights and maintain public trust,” Nartatez said in a statement. In a later interview, Nartatez said that once arrested, Dela Rosa will be turned over to the DOJ. The DOJ did not say if the senator would be flown immediately to The Hague, Netherlands, where he will be under the International Criminal Court (ICC) detention. “The procedure to be followed pertains to operational matters that cannot be publicly disclosed so as not to defeat the ultimate objective to bring him to the ICC and exact justice,” DOJ spokesman Polo Martinez said. Last year, former president Rodrigo Duterte was flown directly to The Hague after he arrived at the Ninoy Aquino International Airport from Hong Kong to stand trial for crimes against humanity before the ICC. The PNP’s Criminal Investigation and Detection Group (CIDG) confirmed it has a copy of the ICC arrest warrant for Dela Rosa. The CIDG also assured that the senator has not left the country, belying reports that he has been spotted in Malaysia. “Senator Bato is still in the country, and we will enforce that warrant,” Police Maj. Gen. Robert Alexander Morico II told reporters in Camp Crame. Morico also warned that anyone who will help, protect or block the serving of the warrant against Dela Rosa faces arrest. “If there’s a warrant and you aid a fugitive from evading justice, [that’s] obstruction of justice. We will also be filing charges, and we will be arresting people from resorts, houses or subdivisions who will prevent us from serving the warrant,” he said. The National Bureau of Investigation (NBI) is fielding its own teams to go after the senator. NBI Director Melvin Matibag told a media briefing on Friday that efforts to locate Dela Rosa are in full swing. “We are right now looking for him. If we will see him today, we will arrest him today. If we will see him tomorrow or next week, we will arrest him,” Matibag said. Pressed on whether the NBI will wait for the full ruling of the Supreme Court before implementing the arrest order, Matibag said he is leaving the matter of legal interpretation to the DOJ. Matibag said there is no confirmation from the Bureau of Immigration that Dela Rosa had left the country. Also on Friday, Sen. Robinhood Padilla denied he helped Dela Rosa secretly leave the Senate building last week. Interviewed on the Net 25 program “Sa Ganang Mamamayan,” Padilla dismissed circulating claims he abetted Dela Rosa’s “escape,” saying not one stopped them when they left the Senate. “There were a lot of police inside and outside the Senate, and there is CCTV. No one stopped us,” he said. Padilla said he stayed in the Senate for three days to accompany Dela Rosa amid rising tensions that began after the senator showed up at the Senate following a six-month absence. “You can feel the atmosphere is different. There are armed men outside. There are rallies, there are heated discussions,” he said. He recounted reports of gunfire near the lower portion of the Senate building, sowing fears among the people inside. Padilla and Dela Rosa were reportedly in their offices on the fifth floor at the time. “Some senators were really scared. It was dark, there was no light, and the situation was tense. Some were crying. So, I went down to see if everything was OK,” Padilla said. He said Dela Rosa appeared more concerned about the safety of senators, members of the media and civilians at the Senate complex than about his own situation. Padilla confirmed that Dela Rosa spoke with Local Government Secretary Jonvic Remulla and Nartatez when they visited the Senate after the incident. He recalled Remulla telling Dela Rosa, “I am not here to arrest you, sir; I am here to secure the place.” “The conversation was light-hearted, there was no tension,” Padilla recalled. Padilla said neither the NBI nor the PNP presented any warrant issued by a local court, reinforcing his belief that there was no basis for claims that Dela Rosa was fleeing authorities. Padilla said that shortly before dawn on Thursday, he told Dela Rosa that he needed to go home because his wife was looking for him. Dela Rosa decided to leave with him. “Senator Bato said, ‘I’ll go.’ Why should I deny that? Sen[ator] Bato has no vehicle because he was just brought to the Senate by Sen. Alan Peter Cayetano’s vehicle,” Padilla said. Dela Rosa got off somewhere in Makati City, where his own vehicle fetched him. Padilla said he did not ask where Dela Rosa planned to go afterward. Padilla also objected to descriptions of Dela Rosa as a “fugitive,” arguing that Philippine legal processes should take precedence over external characterizations. “For me, he is not a fugitive. I cannot accept that we should just call him that because a foreigner said so. We also need to respect our own process as a country,” he said. Former PNP chief Nicholas Torre III believes it was the duty of police officers to implement lawful warrants. “It’s not about me or Senator Bato. It is about a process. It is about a system. It is about a law. And it is about a job,” Torre said in an interview on Friday. “The job of the police is not to judge the case but to implement the processes and in this case, the warrant,” he said. Torre said several lawyers and legal authorities have stated that the warrant against Dela Rosa was legal and enforceable.

- ICC rejects Duterte's request to appeal confirmation of charges (2026-05-22 16:14)

THE International Criminal Court’s (ICC) Pre-Trial Chamber I has rejected a request by former president Rodrigo Duterte seeking leave to appeal the decision confirming charges of crimes against humanity related to his war on drugs. In a decision dated May 21, the three-judge panel denied the defense’s “Request for Leave to Appeal the Decision on the Confirmation of Charges,” ruling that neither of the two proposed issues met the legal threshold for an interlocutory appeal under Article 82(1)(d) of the Rome Statute. Duterte was committed to trial on March 23, after the chamber confirmed all charges brought by the prosecution. The defense filed an appeal on March 29, raising two issues: that the chamber erred by adopting an overly “flexible approach” to delineating the scope of the charges; and that it failed to give a reasoned evidentiary basis for confirming the charges. The chamber, presided by Judge Iulia Antoanella Motoc, dismissed both arguments. Regarding the first issue, the chamber said it had clearly set out the basis for defining the charges in paragraphs 17–24 of its original confirmation decision, applying settled ICC jurisprudence — particularly the Appeals Chamber’s reasoning in the Ntaganda case. The judges noted that the charges included specific time periods, geographic locations, categories of victims and alleged perpetrator networks. The broadness of the scope “is inherent to the wide scale of criminality covered” and does not render the case undefined. On the second claim, the judges said that confirmation proceedings do not require an exhaustive, incident-by-incident account of evidence akin to a trial judgment. The confirmation decision, the judges noted, included dedicated sections assessing evidence and cited specific witness sources, police reports and official documents where necessary to illustrate the chamber’s reasoning. “The defense’s submissions regarding the Second Proposed Issue mischaracterize the Confirmation Decision and amount to a mere disagreement with the manner in which the Chamber articulated its assessment of the evidence,” the ruling stated. The chamber concluded that neither proposed issue qualified as an appealable “issue” under the Statute, making it unnecessary to address the remaining cumulative criteria for granting leave to appeal.

- Filipinos 2nd in workplace happiness in Asia-Pacific (2026-05-22 16:13)

EMPLOYEES in the Philippines are the second happiest in the workplace in the Asia Pacific region, according to a Jobstreet SEEK report. The Workplace Happiness Index: Philippines 2025 report said that 77 percent of Filipino employees are “extremely and somewhat happy” in their place of work. With a rating of 82 percent, Indonesia topped the Jobstreet list of the happiest workplaces in the region. Separately, the index said 44 percent are “somewhat happy” while 33 percent are “extremely happy.” Meanwhile, 18 percent are “neutral,” 3 percent are “somewhat unhappy,” while 2 percent are “extremely unhappy.” By region, respondents in the Visayas are the happiest (82 percent), followed by those in the National Capital Region (77 percent). Luzon and Mindanao are tied at last place (76 percent). “Interestingly, happiness at work is similar across Luzon, the Visayas and Mindanao, suggesting that workers in the Philippines are broadly united in their sentiment toward workplace happiness,” the report read. Employees also “increasingly associate their workplace happiness with their sense of purpose, learning and development opportunities, and day-to-day responsibilities” The report found that 77 percent of respondents feel valued at work, while 74 percent described their jobs as “fulfilling, revealing widespread positivity and satisfaction.” “While salary remained the top factor to attract and retain employees, purpose at work — how their work contributes to the overall company and personal goals — has a stronger impact on overall engagement and personal satisfaction, the report reveals,” the report said. “Career progression also emerged as a major factor influencing retention, with 55 percent of respondents saying they think about changing careers somewhat or extremely often. Employees dissatisfied with career progression opportunities were significantly more likely to consider leaving their jobs, which is a key factor in considering clear development pathways among hirers,” it said. However, the report also cited that nearly 40 percent of employees have experienced burnout in their jobs. “Despite broad happiness levels, Jobstreet by SEEK reports that stress and burnout are having an impact on workers. Only two in five (41 percent) report being in control of their stress levels, while 38 percent said they are burnt out or extremely exhausted with their jobs,” it said. Also, 41 percent of workers are concerned about how artificial intelligence (AI) impacts their work. “The report only shows how employee preferences are evolving and how their work environment shapes their overall happiness and sense of purpose. Jobstreet by SEEK, through this study, seeks to empower hirers to navigate these shifts and create workplaces that foster talent engagement and long-term growth,” said Dannah Majarocon, Managing Director of Jobstreet by SEEK in the Philippines. Reacting to the report, Federation of Free Workers President Sonny Matula said overall quality of work should be the focus if the country is to improve its ranking. “If we want to improve our ranking further — and perhaps catch up with or even surpass our Southeast Asian neighbors — we need to focus not only on morale but also on the overall quality of work. This includes fair wages, better working conditions, flexible work arrangements where possible, mental health support and clear career development opportunities,” Matula said in a Viber message to The Manila Times on Friday. “It also makes a huge difference when leaders and companies know how to listen to employees and uphold dignity and respect in the workplace. It is not enough for workers to simply feel happy; their well-being must also be sustainable,” he said. Matula said the report is good news for the Philippines, but said it should not be used as a “discount coupon” for poor working conditions. “In a country where wages are low, the cost of living is high, commutes are exhausting and overtime sometimes moves faster than salary increases, it’s quite remarkable to hear that Filipinos are among the happiest employees in the Asia-Pacific region,” he said. “But perhaps this is also the reality: Filipinos are naturally resilient and positive. Even in toxic workplaces, there are still jokes in the pantry and memes in the group chat. Even with little sleep, the familiar ‘just keep going’ spirit remains alive,” Matula said. He agreed with the report that burnout is still affecting Filipino employees, while others search for “better career growth, work-life balance and fairer compensation.” “Stress and burnout are also driven by low pay, high prices, long commutes, heavy workloads, job insecurity, lack of career growth, AI-related anxiety, and the pressure to keep saying laban lang (just fight) even when already exhausted,” Matula said. The former senatorial candidate also said while concerns about AI in the workplace are real, it should not be rejected, but “governed.” “Concerns about AI in the workplace are real: job displacement, deskilling, surveillance, bias and loss of human dignity. Like the Luddites during the First Industrial Revolution, people fear technologies that threaten their livelihoods — but the solution today is not to destroy AI, rather to manage and govern it so it serves people,” said Matula. He said AI should “improve work” and not make human workers disposable. “The answer is not to reject AI, but to govern it. Workers must be consulted before AI systems are introduced. Companies should provide upskilling, clear rules on data privacy, protection against unfair algorithmic decisions and assurance that AI will assist — not replace — human judgment,” he said. “Overall, workers who feel happy in their roles are nearly twice as likely to feel motivated to go above and beyond for their employer. This reveals that when businesses put employee happiness at the heart of their culture, they’re rewarded with greater engagement, productivity and retention,” the report said.

- Pag-IBIG, DHSUD officials visit Laguna housing site (2026-05-22 16:12)

OFFICIALS from the Department of Human Settlements and Urban Development (DHSUD) and the Home Development Mutual Fund, also known as the Pag-IBIG Fund, conducted a site inspection in Cabuyao, Laguna, on Thursday and turned over housing units under President Ferdinand Marcos Jr.' s Expanded Pambansang Pabahay Para sa Pilipino (4PH) Program. A ceremony on Thursday highlighted the government' s "continuing efforts to help more Filipino families gain access to decent and affordable housing." Housing Secretary Jose Ramon Aliling and Pag-IBIG Fund Chief Executive Officer Marilene Acosta, together with other government officials and representatives from the private sector, inspected Pasinaya Heights, which is described as "one of the pioneering condominium developments in South Luzon under the Expanded 4PH Program." Aliling said the turnover reflected the Marcos administration' s "commitment to make homeownership more accessible to more Filipinos." "President Marcos has been clear in his directive: decent and affordable housing must be brought closer to Filipino families, especially workers who need government support the most. Pasinaya Heights shows what can be achieved when government, Pag-IBIG Fund and responsible private developers work together. Through the Expanded 4PH Program, we are turning the President' s housing directive into actual homes that Filipino workers can afford," Aliling said. Pag-IBIG said 300 of its members bought units in Pasinaya Heights through its home financing program. Pasinaya Heights is a 2.5-hectare socialized condominium development consisting of four seven-story residential towers with more than 2,700 housing units. Amenities include a swimming pool, covered basketball court, playground, daycare center, health care center and open spaces for its residents. "With the program' s subsidized 3 percent interest rate during the first five years, an eligible borrower buying a Pasinaya Heights unit valued at P1.404 million may pay about P5,919 per month. This is lower than the P8,644 monthly amortization under Pag-IBIG Fund' s regular housing loan rate, and is also below many condominium rental rates in nearby Laguna areas," the agency said in a statement. Acosta said the new project under the Pag-IBIG Fund shows how the Expanded 4PH Program and the agency' s Housing Loan work together in helping workers purchase their own homes through affordable monthly payments. Acosta also recognized Joy-Nostalgi Hearth Corp. for its "continued partnership with Pag-IBIG Fund in advancing socialized housing projects nationwide" and added that the developer has "consistently been recognized among the agency' s top-performing partners," reflecting its "significant contribution in expanding access to affordable housing for Filipino workers." "Every peso saved from monthly housing payments matters to our members. It can help pay for food, education, health care, utilities and other daily needs of the family. Through the Expanded 4PH Program and Pag-IBIG Fund' s subsidized Housing Loan rate for socialized homes, Filipino workers now have a real and practical path to owning a safe and decent home. In doing so, we help ease the monthly burden of Filipino families, bring homeownership within their reach and allow them to build a better future under a Bagong Pilipinas," she said.

- Potential 'super' El Nino forming in Pacific (2026-05-22 16:11)

FORECASTERS say a potentially “super” El Niño is rapidly taking shape in the Pacific — but whether it evolves into a history-making event could hinge on fickle winds and other volatile atmospheric shifts. The fast-warming tropical Pacific is pointing to a major event, but a crucial weakening of trade winds — capable of turbocharging or throttling the phenomenon — has yet to materialize. Scientists say these interactions are notoriously complex and difficult to predict — making it too early to confidently forecast how powerful this El Niño could become. The United States National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration (NOAA) says there is about an 80 percent chance of El Niño developing by July. Sea temperatures in key El Niño zones of the equatorial Pacific are rapidly rising, and an enormous pool of abnormally warm water is massing beneath the surface. Several leading weather services are predicting Pacific sea temperatures could surge 2.5C or more above average later this year — exceptionally high projections. Just three events — 1982/83, 1997/98 and 2015/16 — have breached 2C since the first major El Niño recorded in the modern era in 1877/78. Adam Scaife, head of long-range prediction at the UK Met Office, said this El Niño could be the strongest in decades or “even be of record strength.” “There’s definitely something coming. We’re very confident about that, and it looks like it will be a big event,” he told Agence France-Presse (AFP). NOAA forecasts a one-in-three chance this episode will hit 2C or above — crossing into what is dubbed “super El Niño” territory. But key pieces of the puzzle had yet to fall into place, said Michelle L’Heureux, NOAA’s El Niño-Southern Oscillation lead. El Niños build strength as the ocean and atmosphere increasingly “couple” over the summer months, shifting air pressure, cloud patterns and winds. This feedback loop can turn a modest El Niño into a blockbuster event, supercharging heat and triggering chaotic weather worldwide. A hallmark of the strongest El Niños is the weakening of trade winds that blow east to west across the equator. But those winds are unpredictable and can strengthen unexpectedly, said L’Heureux. “When that happens, it pauses the growth of El Niño or even reverses it,” she told AFP. “Ultimately the strength of this event will be likely influenced by these details, like the low-level winds, which we cannot predict many months in advance.” El Niño tends to peak around December but ocean heat releases slowly and can drive up global temperatures the following years. Many record-hot years — including 1998, 2010, 2016, 2023 and 2024 — followed major El Niño events or developed alongside them. Climate scientists interviewed by AFP said global heat records could fall in 2026 — but 2027 was the year to watch. There “could easily be a new record level of global warmth in 2027” if an extreme El Niño takes shape this year, said Scaife.

- Bong Go: Sara trial should reveal truth, expose lies (2026-05-22 16:10)

SEN. Bong Go on Friday said the impeachment trial of Vice President Sara Duterte should serve as an opportunity for the truth to emerge and for falsehoods to be exposed before the public. In a statement on Friday, Go emphasized that senators acting as judges have a clear constitutional mandate: to hear the case impartially and decide based solely on evidence, the law and the truth. He stressed that political affiliations or alliances should not influence the proceedings, and that every senator must fulfill his or her constitutional duty regardless of political loyalties. “Whether Duterte bloc or any other bloc, we Filipinos must perform our duties. And I will be impartial,” Go said. He warned that he would not hesitate to call out what he believes are false statements or fabricated evidence, citing testimonies from previous congressional inquiries that he described as questionable. “So if I see a lie — that’s why I didn’t speak the other day — if I see a lie in what is being presented, I will say it’s a lie,” he said. Go noted that the impeachment court provides a more structured venue for cross-examination and fact-finding, compared to earlier congressional hearings. “This is our chance to bring out the truth. We saw a lot in their hearings; we saw some liars. This is where we will ask them. This is my chance to ask questions and make a decision,” he said. The Senate formally convened as an impeachment court on May 18, with senators taking their oath as senator-judges for the trial of Vice President Duterte.

- Lacson says Senate probe should focus on reforms (2026-05-22 16:10)

ANY Senate investigation into the May 13 shooting incident inside the Senate premises should concentrate on preventive measures and institutional reforms instead of determining criminal liability, Sen. Panfilo Lacson said Friday. Lacson said the criminal aspect of the incident should be left to law enforcement agencies, and it would be “awkward” for the Senate to investigate itself. “I will suggest that we let the National Bureau of Investigation (NBI) or Philippine National Police (PNP), or even the Department of Justice, do the investigation,” Lacson said in a mix of English and Filipino during a radio interview. “Limit the Committee of the Whole inquiry into coming up with remedial legislation or administrative remedies so there will be no repeat of what happened last May 13.” The lawmaker and former PNP chief said senators should avoid assigning blame or identifying who should face charges, because doing so could turn the proceedings into a public spectacle. “For me, it’s really awkward for us to be investigating ourselves,” Lacson said in a separate interview. “We would become a spectacle again if we point fingers at each other, so it’s better to have a focused and positive approach.” He said he intends to raise the matter when the Senate resumes session on Monday. As part of efforts to establish a clear timeline of events, Lacson said he wants senators to review closed-circuit television (CCTV) footage beginning May 11, when Senator Ronald Dela Rosa reportedly entered the Senate building, until his departure before dawn on May 14. According to Lacson, reviewing the complete footage would address allegations that previously released video clips were “spliced” and clarify how agents from the NBI attempted to serve an arrest warrant issued by the International Criminal Court against Dela Rosa. “We will stick to the facts as it happened and unfolded,” Lacson said. He also questioned the manner in which the NBI attempted to implement the warrant, noting that only two female agents were reportedly assigned to approach Dela Rosa. Dela Rosa was able to evade the agents and proceed to the session hall on May 11. “If the NBI had assigned five bigger agents, what happened last May 11 might not have happened,” Lacson said. He also addressed allegations involving Sen. Robinhood Padilla, who has been accused by critics of helping Dela Rosa evade authorities. He said any effort to hold Padilla accountable must go through the Senate Ethics Committee. Lacson clarified that the ethics panel cannot initiate an investigation on its own. “A complaint has to be filed, and it has to be sufficient in form and substance for the ethics committee to act on it,” he said. He added that it may be preferable for a civilian complainant to file the case because any senator who files a complaint would have to inhibit himself or herself from the proceedings.

- Cayetano ‘fell short’ of Atenean ethical leadership (2026-05-22 16:09)

THE Ateneo de Manila University Law School Student Council said Thursday that Senate President Alan Peter Cayetano has “fallen short” of the ethical leadership expected of him as an alumnus of the school. This comes after Cayetano’s law school batchmates issued a similar statement regarding his role in last week’s Senate incident that saw his ally, fugitive senator Ronald dela Rosa, evade arrest by virtue of a warrant issued by the International Criminal Court (ICC). Dela Rosa is being implicated as the chief implementer of the bloody drug war of former president Rodrigo Duterte that has allegedly resulted in extrajudicial killings. “When our alumni serve in public office, their conduct inevitably reflects upon the values their alma mater claims to uphold. Consequently, when Atenean lawyers appear to defend impunity or undermine the great mechanisms of accountability, it behooves the Ateneo community to express our disappointment,” the student council said. “In this light, the Ateneo Law Student Council believes that Senator Alan Cayetano fell short of the ethical leadership expected of him as an Atenean. His actions disappoint those students who look to alumni of this institution for examples of principled leadership. Furthermore, his commitment to impunity is a mockery of the Ignatian values that we were all taught to hold dear to the core of our hearts,” it added. Ateneo student leaders called on the Senate president to reflect on his actions. “We call on Senate President Alan Peter Cayetano, an alumnus, to reflect on whether the conduct now being defended in the Senate is truly worthy of the principles of Truth (Veritas), Integrity (Integritas), and Justice (Justitia) that Ateneo Law stands for,” they said. The student council also called on Sen. Ronald dela Rosa to “cease his evasion of international legal processes and to submit himself fully to the lawful mechanisms designed to address the allegations against him.” “We call on the Philippine Senate to honor its constitutional mandate, to resist the temptation of institutional solidarity at the expense of institutional integrity, and to refuse to become a sanctuary against accountability,” they said. “The rule of law is not self-enforcing. It depends on institutions that take it seriously, on lawyers who live it, and on communities who demand it. The Ateneo Law School Student Council exists within that chain of responsibility. We are not naive about the limits of a student statement. But we are equally clear about the cost of silence. To say nothing in a moment like this is itself a choice, and not one we are willing to make,” they added. In a related development, poets and artists under Senate President Pro Tempore Loren Legarda’s Kislap Diwa cultural project voiced their displeasure with their patron’s actions, dissociating themselves from the senator. “A senator who invokes the language of culture has now joined a bloc whose inaugural act was to shield an individual from international justice. She has done so in silence. Whatever her reasons, the effect is plain: she has lent her name and through her, a portion of ours, to a Senate that has chosen to be a refuge rather than a forum... Championship of the arts is not measured by past patronage. It is measured by the courage to stand against political convenience when it is costly to do so. On this, the Senator has failed,” they said in a statement. “We therefore formally disassociate ourselves from Senator Loren Legarda. We do not consent to our names, participation, or work under Kislap Diwa being used as part of her cultural legacy or in support of her political conduct. We will not accept further invitations to appear, read, or be honored in any capacity associated with her office,” they added. Last week, Legarda’s photo was taken down from the Wall of Women Empowerment at her high school alma mater, Assumption College San Lorenzo in Makati City.

- Passage of Healthy Food Environment Bill sought (2026-05-22 16:08)

LAWMAKERS and health experts called for the swift passage of the Healthy Food Environment Bill, which mandates food companies to put front-of-package warning labels on unhealthy food products. "Prevention begins long before a patient enters a hospital. It addresses one of the hidden drivers of hypertension, heart disease, stroke, and kidney disease: excess sodium in the food that Filipinos eat every day," Iloilo 2nd District Rep. Kathryn Joyce Gorriceta said in a press conference led by ImagineLaw in Quezon City on Friday. Gorriceta noted that the measure aims to address the rise of non-communicable diseases such as hypertension, cardiovascular diseases, and obesity in the country by regulating sodium levels, improving food labeling, and curbing the aggressive marketing of unhealthy food products. According to the Philippine Heart Association, 37 percent of Filipinos suffer from hypertension, yet only half are aware of their condition. The “silent epidemic” has been linked to high sodium consumption, with Filipinos consuming more than double the World Health Organization's recommended daily limit of 2 grams of sodium. Gorriceta said the bill was created using a science-based approach to reducing sodium in processed foods, sauces, and condiments, while also advocating for front-of-pack warning labels and responsible food marketing. "This is not about removing freedom of choice. It is about making the healthy choice the easy choice," she said. Meanwhile, Akbayan Partylist Rep. Perci Cendaña underscored the importance of clear food labeling, likening it to relationships. "If there's anything we learn from love, it's that red flags are dangerous. The same applies to food. High sodium, sugar, and fat content should come with clear warnings," he noted. He said the bill is not anti-business but pro-family and pro-health. "The cost of inaction is far greater than the cost of reform. We cannot wait for more strokes, heart attacks, and kidney failures. We must act now while prevention is still possible," said Gorriceta. The bill has since garnered support from about 87 lawmakers and is supported by members of the Healthy Food Environment Coalition, including the Philippine Society of Hypertension, Alliance for Improving Health Outcomes, Philippine Society of Public Health Physicians, Quezon City Health Department, and World Vision Philippines.

- Fuel prices up for second straight week (2026-05-22 16:07)

DIESEL and gasoline prices are expected to go up again next week as global markets continue to react to developments in the Middle East, and a lack of supply, local oil industry sources said Friday. Diesel prices will go up by around P1.00 to P1.30 per liter, while gasoline prices are expected to jump between P1.20 and P1.50 per liter. These estimates are based on the four-day trading of Mean of Platts Singapore (MOPS), the pricing basis of refined goods in Southeast Asia. This will be the second consecutive week where diesel and gasoline prices increased. Sources noted, however, that crude prices have been trending lower by the end of the week due to reports saying that the ceasefire negotiations between the US, Israel and Iran are heading toward the final stages; and also because of the recent extension of a waiver allowing countries to temporarily procure Russian crude. "Based on the first four trading days of MOPS, diesel prices were initially elevated due to high crude prices and unresolved supply disruptions, all due to the uncertainty in the Middle East. Meanwhile, gasoline prices were also higher, with supplies from Asia possibly moving to other regions amid reduced production in Europe, and demand from the US accelerating with the onset of the peak summer season," a source said. "However, by the end of the week, crude and refined products prices have eased down recently due to positive developments in the peace talks, with signals that negotiations are in the final stages. Nevertheless, volatility can be expected as uncertainty and tensions in the Middle East continue to linger. Other factors in the recent decline in prices are the extension of sanctions waiver on Russian oil, and the limited movements through the Strait of Hormuz, which in turn sparked hopes of normalization in the route," the source added. This week, diesel prices spiked by up to P2.82 per liter, while gasoline prices increased by up to P1.21 per liter.

- AICS available to middle-class Filipinos (2026-05-22 16:06)

THE Department of Social Welfare and Development (DSWD) said that the Assistance to Individuals in Crisis Situations (AICS) program is not exclusive to indigents but also available to middle-class Filipinos facing emergencies. DSWD Crisis Intervention Program Director Edwin Morata said Friday that the agency is continually improving the program to respond to the changing needs of people affected by various crises. Morata said that the AICS is designed to assist individuals and families whose financial capacity is overwhelmed by unexpected situations. "The AICS program is really not just for the poor," he added. Morata noted that disasters, health emergencies, and economic shocks can affect anyone regardless of social or economic status. "Crises do not choose whether you are rich or poor, employed or unemployed, middle class or low-income, because everyone can be affected by disasters, energy emergencies, and health shocks," he said. "When a person or family faces a need that they were unprepared for and their financial capacity cannot meet that need, that is why we have this program, and it is open to everyone," Morata added. The DSWD said it has streamlined the AICS application process, reducing it to three major steps: queuing, assessment and interview, and release of assistance. Applicants are required to present valid identification cards and supporting documents such as medical certificates, prescriptions, treatment protocols, statements of account, or laboratory requests with price quotations.

- Aquino opposes proposed ad permit (2026-05-22 16:05)

SEN. Bam Aquino voiced strong opposition Friday to a proposed regulation by the Department of Trade and Industry (DTI) that would require businesses to secure permits before releasing advertisements and sales promotions. Aquino warned that such a measure could further burden micro, small, and medium enterprises (MSMEs) and online sellers already grappling with rising operational costs. Under the proposed Department Administrative Order (DAO), businesses would be required to obtain permits and submit applications at least 30 working days before publishing advertisements or launching promotional campaigns. The proposal covers both traditional and digital advertising platforms, including sponsored social media posts, online videos, billboards, and other promotional materials. “Our small businesses have not yet recovered from the impact of the oil crisis, and we are planning to impose another burden on them,” Aquino said. Aquino, who authored and sponsored the Go Negosyo Act during his first term as chairman of the Senate Committee on Trade, Commerce and Entrepreneurship, stressed that MSMEs remain the backbone of the Philippine economy, accounting for about 99 percent of businesses and jobs nationwide. The Go Negosyo Law was enacted to improve MSMEs’ access to financing, markets, training programs, and streamlined business registration processes aimed at encouraging entrepreneurship and economic growth. “Instead of allowing small businesses to strategize to increase their profits, we are creating additional burdens and processes that will hinder their market entry and growth,” Aquino added. The senator argued that while consumer protection is a legitimate government function, the proposed DAO imposes what he described as excessive bureaucracy that could hamper legitimate businesses rather than effectively address deceptive advertising practices. “Consumer protection is one of the main functions of the DTI, but regulation must be targeted, practical, and appropriate,” he said. Aquino raised concerns over the proposed 30-day approval period, saying it is incompatible with the fast-paced nature of modern commerce, particularly in the digital marketplace, where businesses rely on timely marketing campaigns and online promotions to remain competitive. “In this day and age where business is fast, especially online, it is unfair for businesses to wait a month before they can issue advertisements or promotions,” he said. The senator warned that the additional compliance costs could discourage aspiring entrepreneurs and smaller enterprises from entering or expanding in the market. “It is no joke that the proposed fees will add further hardship to our businesses, especially those that are just starting. Maybe instead of encouraging them to do business, they might back down because of the additional costs and lengthy process,” Aquino said. Under the proposal, permit fees for advertisements could reportedly range from P975 to P9,295 per advertisement, an amount Aquino said could significantly affect MSMEs and online sellers operating on limited capital. Aquino noted that existing laws, including the Consumer Act of the Philippines, already provide mechanisms to regulate deceptive advertisements and sales promotions. He said the proposed DAO appears to substantially broaden government oversight, particularly in the digital space, and may require further review to ensure consistency with existing ease-of-doing-business policies. The senator also raised possible constitutional concerns, saying the proposal could be interpreted as a form of prior restraint because it would require government approval before commercial advertisements are released to the public. Aquino cited the Internet Transactions Act, which grants the DTI authority over internet-based electronic commerce, but argued that the law does not expressly authorize a blanket permit requirement for all advertisements. He urged the DTI to reconsider the proposal and focus instead on strengthening enforcement mechanisms against fraudulent and misleading advertisements without imposing additional burdens on legitimate businesses.

METROPOLITAN Manila Development Authority (MMDA) General Manager Nicholas Torre III on Friday said early May rains exposed gaps in Metro Manila's flood control readiness, and moved to tighten inspections of drainage systems, pumping stations, and private infrastructure linked to flooding incidents. Torre admitted that the initial downpours revealed vulnerabilities in flood preparedness, with several areas inundated even after relatively light rainfall despite pre-season desilting and estero cleanup operations. He said the initial downpours effectively served as a "de facto audit" of the system, revealing areas where waterways remain undersized or clogged, drainage systems are blocked, and some pumping stations may be underperforming or non-operational. Torre said the agency is now applying a "surgical" inspection approach, targeting specific flood-prone locations to determine whether the cause lies in waterways, drainage systems, or pumping station capacity. He also flagged issues involving private concessionaires and infrastructure developers, saying some projects were found improperly discharging water from downspouts directly onto roads instead into drainage systems. He said the MMDA has already called meetings with concerned parties to demand rectification, warning that continued non-compliance could lead to public call-out and penalties. "If they still fail to comply with connecting their downspouts to the drainage system, we will publicly call them out," Torre said. He said the agency is also coordinating with the Department of Environment and Natural Resources (DENR) on compliance checks, particularly on wastewater discharge requirements into waterways. He added that enforcement efforts and tight compliance monitoring focus on establishments and larger entities, not only individuals. On waste management, Torre also blamed persistent garbage dumping for worsening floods in Metro Manila, and that waterways cleared by the MMDA are often clogged again within a week, underscoring recurring garbage problems that worsen flooding. He said the agency collects about 1,000 tons of garbage monthly from waterways and pumping stations combined, or an estimated 12,000 tons annually — consisting of roughly 7,000 tons from waterways and 5,000 tons from pumping stations. Torre also confirmed that around 80 pumping stations are being monitored in coordination with the Department of Public Works and Highways, saying that two previously identified defective units are undergoing repair, commissioning, and testing.

BATANGAS 1st District Rep. Leandro Leviste hangs a portrait of his mother, Sen. Loren Legarda, on a wall in his office. He posted a picture of it on Facebook, saying with a heart emoji, “There is a beautiful portrait in my office.” The post came several days after the Assumption Student Council encouraged the college’s community to sign a petition to remove a portrait of the senator from the Wall of Empowered Women. “This position is issued in light of the Senate leadership change on May 11, 2026...,” it said in a statement posted on Facebook. Legarda voted for Sen. Alan Peter Cayetano for Senate president. Before the student council issued the statement, the board of trustees of the Assumption Alumnae Association, in a statement, called on all Assumption alumnae “to return to the women they were formed to be.” The leadership change in the Senate, which solely has the power to conduct an impeachment trial under the 1987 Constitution, came before the House of Representatives impeached Vice President Sara Duterte on the same day. The Senate convened as an impeachment court on May 18, 2026, and ordered the issuance of a writ of summons directing her to file an answer on the impeachment complaints sent to the Senate by the House, which, under the Constitution, solely has the power to initiate impeachment cases. The Office of Vice President Sara Duterte later confirmed receipt of the summons. She has denied the allegations in the two impeachment complaints against her, which the House Committee on Justice heard to determine whether there was probable cause to impeach her. The committee sent the articles of impeachment to the House plenary and, later, the House, voting 257-25 with nine abstentions, impeached Duterte. Earlier this month, Leviste told his mother that he loved her very much while greeting her with a “Happy Mother’s Day.”

A MANILA councilor was recommended by the Manila Office of the City Prosecutor (OCP) on charges for violation of the Safe Spaces Act. The OCP, in a nine-page resolution released Friday, recommended that Ryan Ponce be charged with three counts of violating Section 16, Paragraph (c) of the Safe Spaces Act over separate incidents that allegedly occurred on Aug. 18, 2025; Sept. 18, 2025; and Sept. 29, 2025. In her privilege speech back on Oct. 9, 2025, councilor Eunice Castro accused Ponce of repeatedly harassing her with inappropriate jokes and malicious messages. Ponce supposedly sent messages to Castro, saying he is anticipating seeing what she wears for work, and asking her to send photos of what she is wearing in the morning. Manila City Vice Mayor Chi Atienza then referred the issue to the city council’s Committee on Ethics for investigation. The OCP lamented that Ponce’s messages were sexual in nature and unwelcome. “It should be noted that the respondent, a married man, directed the messages containing sexual undertones toward the complainant, a single woman,” it said. The OCP further argued that Castro experienced “offense, humiliation, and distress” caused by Ponce’s behavior, which is “inappropriate and unacceptable within the professional standards.”

THE Department of Health (DOH) clarified on Friday cases of human immunodeficiency virus (HIV) decreased by 9 percent in the first quarter of 2026 compared to the same period last year. This comes after the agency reported there was an increase in HIV cases in the country. According to its website, as of March 2026, the reported cases was at 4,633 in the first quarter of the year, compared with 5,101 cases in the same period in 2025. The DOH told The Manila Times that it would update its website to provide the corrected version. “The DOH will upload a corrected version of the report from the HIV/AIDS Registry Operations and Surveillance of the Philippines to replace the previously released file. The corrected version is expected to be uploaded within today or by Monday of next week,” the agency said. Data show that of the total number of cases in the first quarter of the year, 4,381 HIV cases, or 95 percent, were males, while 252 were females. Despite the increase, the average number of cases recorded per day declined by 11 percent from the previous quarter, with a daily log of 51 cases. The National Capital Region saw the highest number of HIV infections with 989 cases, followed by Calabarzon with 808, Central Luzon with 551, Soccsksargen with 277, and the Davao Region with 263. Earlier this week, DOH Secretary Ted Herbosa and Joint United Nations Program on HIV/AIDS, or UNAIDS, Deputy Executive Director Angeli Achrekar met to discuss strategies to fortify HIV/AIDS prevention and management mechanisms.

- Plunder complaint filed vs Sen. Marcoleta, Mike Defensor (2026-05-22 15:50)

MANILA, Philippines — Field investigators from the Office of the Ombudsman filed a complaint for alleged plunder against Sen. Rodante Marcoleta, former lawmaker Michael Defensor, and two other people before the said office which later ordered the respondents to file counter-affidavits. In an Order dated May 21, 2026, the Office of the Ombudsman gave the respondents 15 days from receipt of its order to make the filing. In the complaint, filed last May 18, the investigators said that "Marcoleta's acceptance of gifts with an aggregate amount of PHP75 Million on three separate occasions constitute the crime of Plunder". It allegedly happened when he was a member of the House of Representatives. The investigators said that Marcoleta on Jan. 6, 2025 received P30 million from Defensor which, they said, was "evidenced by a Donor's Tax Return and a... deposit slip showing that Defensor paid the donor's tax on" Dec. 17, 2025. The investigators said that Marcoleta on Jan. 8, 2025 received P25 million from Joseph Varias Espiritu which was "evidenced by a Donor's Tax Return and a... deposit slip showing that Espiritu paid the donor's tax on" Dec. 15, 2025. The investigators said that Marcoleta on Jan. 9, 2025 received P20 million from Aristotle Baluyut Viray. "Aside from the lack of a clear purpose or pending transaction for which the amounts received may be a consideration, there is no showing that the gifts would still be given were it not for Respondent's position on government. Hence it cannot be denied that the P75 Million was given by Respondents Defensor, Espiritu, and Viray by reason of Respondent Marcoleta's office", the investigators said. Defensor, Espiritu, and Viray "belatedly filed the donor's taxes for the gifts. However, the payments were merely their afterthought and were intended to invoke good faith and make it appear that the gifts were legally accepted", the investigators said. Under the National Internal Revenue Code, the return of the donor shall be filed within 30 days after the date the gift was made. "In this case, all the donor's taxes for the gifts given in January 2025 were paid in December 2025, or almost 12 months thereafter", the investigators said. Aside from wanting the Ombudsman's office to file a plunder case in court against Marcoleta, Defensor, Espiritu, and Viray, the investigators wanted the same office to file three indirect bribery cases against Marcoleta. "Undoubtedly, Respondent Marcoleta should also be charged for Indirect Bribery for accepting the gifts from the private individuals, which although not given as consideration for a specific act, were actually given because of his position or potential influence as a public officer", they said. "To reiterate, while Respondent Marcoleta admitted accepting the gifts and characterized them as 'donations', the disposition of which rests upon his discretion, there is no indication as to his relationship with the givers and as to why he would be given such excessive amounts of money. The amounts given were of such magnitude and reason dictates that it can no longer be considered as an ordinary act of generosity, but rather a corrupt act done to gain unwarranted favors from the recipient", they said.

- A grieving father buries his 6-year-old after a land mine kills 3 children in Syria's Idlib (2026-05-22 15:49)

IDLIB, Syria — Idris al-Ridah wept as he carried the lifeless body of his 6-year-old son Amir, wrapped in a yellow and brown blanket, in northwest Syria. The father collapsed to the ground as he laid his son to rest, his small body lowered into a grave next to two other young children who were siblings, Aya al-Fankih, 4, and Rayan al-Fankih, 6. The three children were killed on Thursday in the village of Abu Habbah, in the countryside in the northwestern province of Idlib, when a land mine left behind from Syria's war exploded while they were playing near a well. The deaths are the latest reminder of the dangers posed by unexploded war remnants scattered across the country years after the conflict began. Mines and booby traps have killed and maimed hundreds of Syrians since Syria's conflict began in March 2011, leaving about half a million people dead. The Syrian Civil Defense said four other children who were near the well were also wounded in the blast. "We heard a very loud explosion next to our house," one resident, Mahmoud al-Alewi. He added that "when we got to the location there were a number of children's bodies thrown around the well." He said one of the children was thrown 300 meters (984 feet) away by the explosion and was found on the roof of a house. At a nearby hospital, wounded children cried as family members tended to them. One child had shrapnel wounds across his face and body, his legs wrapped in bandages. Another lay in bed with blood visible through bandages wrapped around his head. Ten-year-old Ibrahim al-Suwadi was injured last month in a separate explosion caused by unexploded ordnance inside a damaged school in the town of al-Habit in Idlib's southern countryside. Sitting beside his father inside their home, al-Suwadi described how he was playing with his friends at the school when they went inside a room and found the mine. "Two brothers picked it up and took it to the bathroom," the boy said. "We thought it was an exploded mine so we started throwing rocks at it. All of a sudden, an older boy grabbed my hand and we ran, the mine exploded and I lost consciousness then I don't remember anything." His father said the family had fled their village in 2013 during fighting and spent years living in displacement camps before returning after the fall of Bashar Assad's government in December 2024. Humanitarian organizations say unexploded ordnance remains one of the deadliest legacies of Syria's war. "Syria has ranked among the top contaminated countries around the world over the past years," said Jakub Valenta, head of humanitarian disarmament and peace building for the Danish Refugee Council in Syria. He added that according to the data from the United Nations, around 14.3 million people are in danger of explosive ordnance in the country. Valenta said the explosive hazards include anti-personnel mines, anti-tank mines and other unexploded devices left behind in residential and agricultural areas. "We're estimating that around 1,200 people and probably more have been affected by explosive ordnance accidents directly," he said. "Out of those 1,200 people there were around 740 fatal casualties. The vast majority of these people are men and children." According to the Danish Refugee Council, around 60% of contaminated areas in Syria are agricultural lands, complicating efforts by displaced families to return home and rebuild livelihoods. In Damascus's southern suburb of Kisweh earlier this month, Syrian trainees working with Danish Refugee Council teams carefully removed and destroyed unexploded ordnance during training exercises aimed at expanding local demining capacity. The organization says it has recruited and trained new Syrian explosive ordnance disposal teams to help clear contaminated areas and educate communities about the risks. "The number of the casualties is among the highest worldwide in terms of explosive accidents and victims," Valenta said. "These people suffer lifelong injuries, physical like losing a limb or their vision and suffer mental health problems," he said. "These people also lose their jobs and livelihoods."

- The game's afoot as armchair detectives mark Sherlock Holmes Day (2026-05-22 15:37)

SCHATTENHALB, Switzerland — From 221B Baker Street in central London to a cliffside waterfall in the Swiss Alps, generations of armchair detectives are celebrating International Sherlock Holmes Day on Friday. Fans will mark Sir Arthur Conan Doyle's birthday in tribute to the author and his most famous character whose adventures continue to shape popular culture around the world. The celebrations began earlier this month when — sporting Victorian capes, deerstalker hats and period gowns — enthusiasts from the Sherlock Holmes Society of London traveled to Switzerland's Reichenbach Falls to reenact one of literature's most famous fictional death scenes. The fateful confrontation between Sherlock Holmes and his nemesis Professor James Moriarty shocked readers of "The Final Problem" and appeared to bring one of literature's most beloved detectives to an end. In the original 1893 story, Holmes disappears over the edge of the falls with Moriarty, leaving his sidekick, Dr. John Watson, to discover a farewell letter near the water. Conan Doyle — who was born on May 22, 1859 — intended the scene to permanently kill off Holmes because he feared the detective stories were overshadowing what he considered his more serious historical writing. At the time, readers canceled magazine subscriptions, wore black armbands in mourning and protested against Holmes' death. A decade later, Conan Doyle reversed the decision and brought Holmes back in "The Adventure of the Empty House," revealing that the detective had staged his death and survived the falls. The Sherlock Holmes stories helped establish many of the conventions of modern detective fiction. Between 1887 and 1927, Conan Doyle wrote four Holmes novels and 56 short stories, introducing techniques such as forensic deduction, close observation and logical analysis that later became standard elements of crime fiction. The stories have since been adapted for the stage, screen and in comic books around the world, with Jeremy Brett, Basil Rathbone, Christopher Lee, Robert Downey Jr. and Benedict Cumberbatch starring in portrayals. British actor Hero Fiennes Tiffin stars in the latest iteration in Amazon Prime's new prequel series "Young Sherlock," created by Guy Ritchie and released earlier this year. A second season is in the works. At 221B Baker Street, the Sherlock Holmes Museum has drawn visitors since it opened in 1990 with curiosities including Holmes' violin and chemistry set, as well as a revolver resting inside a hollowed-out book. Holmes, according to the stories, lived at the Georgian townhouse between 1881 and 1904 and shared the residence with Watson. But 221B didn't actually exist when Conan Doyle was writing: Baker Street numbers didn't reach that high at the time. The museum, physically located between 237 and 241, had to be granted special permission by Westminster City Council to bear the renowned number. "It has to be the most famous address in the world, I would say," tour guide Paul Leharne said. "No matter what reincarnation Sherlock Holmes is going to take, he's always going to be living at 221B Baker Street." With theatrical poses, exaggerated acting and black cloaks billowing in the mountain spray, members of the Sherlock Holmes Society of London on May 3 reenacted the struggle between Holmes and Moriarty at Reichenbach Falls. Founded in 1951, the society brings together readers, collectors, academics and enthusiasts of Conan Doyle's work. The trip to the Reichenbach Falls followed part of the route described in “The Final Problem.” Members traveled through Switzerland in vintage buses before boarding a cog railway that climbs steeply toward the waterfall. The Reichenbach Falls became one of the most famous locations in detective fiction after Conan Doyle visited the area during an 1893 trip. Philip Porter, an author and publisher who starred as Sherlock Holmes in the society's reproduction, said the setting itself remains central to the stories' appeal. “It's a pilgrimage,” he said. “It's a very dramatic setting: The sound, the backdrop, the music behind us of the cascading water.” Peter Horrocks, who played Moriarty, said the return to normal life after spending several days in a villain's costume can be tough. “It's a strange feeling, getting out of these clothes,” he said. “You do start to inhabit the character that you're playing after a while.”

THE HAGUE, Netherlands — There is a giant stew pot in a small lake in the center of The Hague. Floating in the water in front of the prestigious Mauritshuis museum, home to the “Girl with a Pearl Earring,” the 7-meter (23-foot)-tall pan is part of monthlong, open-air art exhibition. The BlowUp Jubilee features 24 inflatable artworks installed in parks, on buildings and even in a train station in the Dutch city. The project is the brainchild of curator Mary Helsing.

“What I really wanted to do is show the area and show arts to everybody,” she told The Associated Press. In 2021, the Dutch government began a massive renovation project on the Binnenhof complex, which includes the Mauritshuis as well as the Parliament building. The historic site, which dates to the 13th century, was closed to the public and the city wanted to organize art events while it was inaccessible. The first BlowUp Art exhibition in 2022 included works from six artists, installed near the Binnenhof. Subsequent events also showcased a handful of inflatable works, but for the 2026 jubilee edition, all of the previous installations have returned plus new ones have been added. “For me it was important to show the real Curacao in this artwork, and that is our parties, our food, and our lifestyle,” artist Eugenie Boon told AP. The 21-year-old is from the former Dutch Caribbean colony and her work, Koncha pa dilanti, referring to a board game played on the island, features scenes from local life. British artist Steve Messam is known for his large-scale inflatable works that have been installed in locations in the United Kingdom, China and The Hague. Crested, a mass of red spikes, has been affixed on top of the entrance to a parking garage nestled between 100-year-old buildings on a tree-lined boulevard. “The idea was that this piece would hold its own amongst this wonderful architecture that we see around us,” he said.

MANILA, Philippines — A detached wall section from the Tramo flyover in Pasay City partially blocked one lane on Friday evening, prompting the Metropolitan Manila Development Authority to coordinate with the Department of Public Works and Highways for immediate assessment and response. The MMDA said the road hazard was reported at around 7:16 p.m. along the southbound portion of the Tramo flyover beside Winston Hotel. One lane remained occupied as authorities secured the area with safety lines and plastic barriers to prevent accidents. The MMDA said its Road Safety Unit installed additional reflectorized markings and early warning devices at around 8:54 p.m. to improve visibility for motorists passing through the affected area. The agency said it coordinated with the DPWH for further inspection and response operations following the incident.

- Slow Food founder and advocate of clean eating Carlo Petrini dies in Italy at 76 (2026-05-22 13:55)

MILAN — Carlo Petrini, the founder of the Slow Food global grassroots movement promoting sustainable food production and local, traditional cuisine, died Friday at the age of 76 in his hometown in Italy's northwestern Piedmont region, the organization announced. Slow Food called him "a visionary leader and a public intellectual with a profound commitment to the common good, human relationships and the natural world." Slow Food, initially called Arcigola, grew out of opposition to the arrival of fast food in Italy, with a 1986 protest on the steps of the newly opened McDonald's at Rome's Spanish Steps announcing their mission. Petrini was elected president on Dec. 9, 1989, in Paris, when more than 20 delegations from around the world signed the Slow Food Manifesto. He held the position until 2022. The movement was shaped around the philosophy that food should be "good, clean and fair," and it spread quickly throughout Italy and to more than 160 countries. Restaurants adhering to the principles display Slow Food stickers, recognizable by the snail logo and formally called the Snail of Approval. Key Slow Food initiatives included the 2004 founding of Terra Madre, which created communities of farmers, fishers, chefs and academics to spread the mission. Petrini also founded the University of Gastronomic Sciences, touted as the first academic institution dedicated to the multidisciplinary study of food and food culture — an approach that was recognized when the Italian government established a Bachelor's degree in gastronomic sciences in 2017. The university, located in northern Italy, has trained some 4,000 food professionals from 100 countries, Slow Food said. Petrini also founded the Laudato Si' Communities with the bishop of Verona, Monsignor Domenico Pompili, in 2017, which applied the principles of Pope Francis' environmental encyclical through a network of some 80 local groups. Petrini's books include "Slow Food Nation: Why Our Food Should Be Good, Clean and Fair," and "Slow Food: The Case for Taste," which includes a foreword by Alice Waters, a pioneer of the farm-to-table movement in the United States.

- Shell clashes with climate activists in Dutch Supreme Court (2026-05-22 13:43)

THE HAGUE, Netherlands — Shell and climate activists went head-to-head in the Dutch Supreme Court on Friday, the latest hearing in a long-running legal battle over whether the fossil fuel giant should be forced to cut its carbon emissions. Pressure group Milieudefensie wants judges to impose a legally binding target for emissions reduction, a measure Shell says would be ineffective and counter-productive. Shell and Milieudefensie have spent years battling each other in the courts. Milieudefensie won the first round in 2021 when a lower court ordered Shell to reduce carbon emissions by 45 percent by 2030, a ruling seen as historic at the time. The case then went to the Appeals Court, which struck down the lower court ruling in 2024 and said Shell was "already doing what is expected of them". The Appeals Court said Shell must make an "appropriate contribution" to the Paris climate objectives, but did not set a clear emissions reduction target. The Paris deal committed all nations to cut carbon emissions to limit warming to 2C above pre-industrial levels and encouraged them to aim for 1.5 degrees. Milieudefensie has now taken the battle to the Supreme Court, which is expected to make a ruling in the case in the first half of next year. Addressing the judges directly, Milieudefensie lawyer Roger Cox said courts had a crucial role in the fight against climate change. "Judges have a major role to play in ensuring... that the responsibility resting on states and large corporations is taken seriously," he said. "An emissions reduction order against Shell will make a significant and urgently needed contribution to combatting major climate risks and will thus help to protect human rights and the environment." Shell lawyer Freerk Vermeulen countered it was up to governments, not courts, to regulate emissions. "Court-imposed reduction pathways and supply restrictions for arbitrarily selected individual companies are harmful and, at the very best, ineffective," said Vermeulen. "They lead to inconsistent outcomes and legal uncertainty. They lack nuance, flexibility, coordination and the scale which regulation at European and national level can offer." In a separate case, Milieudefensie is suing Shell in a bid to stop the company investing in new oil and gas fields.

BARCELONA — Puerto Rican superstar Bad Bunny kicked off the European leg of his world tour on Friday in the Spanish city of Barcelona, launching a run of 29 concerts across the continent through to late July. His world tour began last year with a 31-concert residency in San Juan in support of his latest album, "Debi Tirar Mas Fotos" ("I Should Have Taken More Photos"), which blends traditional Puerto Rican music with reggaeton and trap. The European tour includes two nights in Barcelona and two in Lisbon before moving to Madrid for 10 concerts at Atletico Madrid's Metropolitano Stadium. The tour will then continue through Germany, the Netherlands, Britain, France, Sweden, Poland and Italy before concluding in Brussels on July 22. It has already taken in Latin America, Australia and Japan but he did not play in the United States to shield fans from potential raids by immigration authorities. Bad Bunny appeared in the Super Bowl halftime show in the US in February, but supporters of US President Donald Trump criticised him for performing only in Spanish. The 32-year-old rose from the Puerto Rican underground music scene to become one of the world's biggest acts, helping push reggaeton and Latin trap into the global mainstream. He took home three Grammy awards in February including for album of the year.

- Pag-IBIG, DHSUD officials visit Laguna project (2026-05-22 13:17)

Officials from the Department of Human Settlements and Urban Development (DHSUD) and the Home Development Mutual Fund, also known as the Pag-IBIG Fund, conducted a site inspection in Cabuyao, Laguna on Thursday and turned over housing units under President Ferdinand Marcos Jr.'s Expanded Pambansang Pabahay para sa Pilipino Program (4PH). A ceremony was conducted on Thursday and, according to Pag-IBIG, highlighted the government's "continuing efforts to help more Filipino families gain access to decent and affordable housing." Housing Secretary Jose Ramon Aliling and Pag-IBIG Fund Chief Executive Officer Marilene Acosta, along with other government officials and representatives from the private sector, inspected Pasinaya Heights, which is described as "one of the pioneering condominium developments in South Luzon under the Expanded 4PH Program." At the ceremonial turnover, Aliling said this event reflected the Marcos administration's "commitment to make homeownership more accessible to more Filipinos." "President Marcos has been clear in his directive: decent and affordable housing must be brought closer to Filipino families, especially workers who need government support the most. Pasinaya Heights shows what can be achieved when government, Pag-IBIG Fund, and responsible private developers work together. Through the Expanded 4PH Program, we are turning the President's housing directive into actual homes that Filipino workers can afford," Aliling said during the event. According to Pag-IBIG, 300 of its members bought units in Pasinaya Heights through its home financing program. Pag-IBIG said Pasinaya Heights is a 2.5-hectare socialized condominium development consists of four seven-story residential towers with more than 2,700 housing units, and also features amenities that includes a swimming pool, covered basketball court, playground, day care center, health care center, and open spaces for its residents. Acosta said the new condominium project under the Pag-IBIG Fund shows how the Expanded 4PH Program and the agency's Housing Loan work together in helping Filipino workers getting their own their homes by means of "affordable" monthly payments. "Every peso saved from monthly housing payments matters to our members. It can help pay for food, education, health care, utilities and other daily needs of the family. Through the Expanded 4PH Program and Pag-IBIG Fund's subsidized Housing Loan rate for socialized homes, Filipino workers now have a real and practical path to owning a safe and decent home. In doing so, we help ease the monthly burden of Filipino families, bring homeownership within their reach, and allow them to build a better future under a Bagong Pilipinas," she said.

MANILA, Philippines — The House of Representatives approved a bill which aimed to expand the Anti-Violence Against Women and Their Children Act. House Bill 8420 hurdled third and final reading on Wednesday with about 260 lawmakers voting for its passage. Gabriela Women's Party Rep. Sarah Elago, in a statement posted on Facebook, said in Filipino and English that the bill was "an important step to align the law with the worsening form of violence against women and children, especially in online spaces."In 2004, then-president Gloria Macapagal Arroyo, now the congressional representative of Pampanga's second district, signed the Anti-VAWC Act into law."But while times change, the form that violence takes also changes. So it is time to strengthen and amend the law to address the worsening online abuse, harassment, and other new forms of abuse against women and children", Elago said. The bill defines technology-facilitated violence against women and their children. Elago said the bill recognized unauthorized dissemination of sensitive images and creation of fake accounts as crimes. Sound clips of a sensitive nature are also covered by the bill. Elago said the bill recognized "online harassment, stalking, and hacking as forms of violence." The lawmaker also said the bill has stricter penalties for violators. She said these included a P500,000 fine and imprisonment. The bill gives women 20 days of paid leave which, it said, "shall cover the days when" they have to "attend to medical, legal, and other valid concerns related to the pending case." Under the bill, they are entitled to this benefit during "the application of any protection order, investigation, prosecution, and/or trial of the criminal case".

- Senate sergeant-at-arms' 26 shots when there was no attack on Senate 'overkill,' says probers (2026-05-22 09:15)

MANILA, Philippines — The Criminal Investigation and Detection Group (CIDG) on Friday said the 26 shots fired by then Sergeant-At-Arms Mao Aplasca during the May 13 Senate shooting was an “overkill.” In a press briefing at Camp Crame on Friday, Maj. Gen. Robert Alexander Morico II, CIDG director, said that their investigation traced 39 of the 44 spent shells to three firearms issued to Office of the Sergeant-At-Arms (OSAA) personnel. Asked to describe the amount of gunshots fired by the OSAA, Morico said, “Sobra-sobra yung pinaputok doon ng OSAA nang wala namang umaatake sa kanila (The OSAA fired too many bullets when no one was attacking them)--- I can say that is overkill.” Meanwhile, five fired gun cartridge cases were traced to a caliber 5.56 rifle from National Bureau of Investigation agent Darwin Francisco. The CIDG said it recommended filing of raps against Aplasca and two other OSAA personnel since they have “no basis” to use their firearms under Republic Act 11917 or the Private Security Services Industry Act. Mel Oragon, an NBI volunteer driver was arrested during the shooting after he was caught with multiple munitions. He later tested positive for gunpowder nitrates.

- Public warned: Help Bato dela Rosa and face arrest (2026-05-22 09:06)

MANILA, Philippines — The Criminal Investigation and Detection Group (CIDG) of the Philippine National Police (PNP) warned that anyone who would attempt to help, protect or block the arrest of Sen. Ronald “Bato” dela Rosa would suffer the same fate and face charges. “If there’s a warrant and you aid a fugitive from evading justice [that’s] obstruction of justice. We will also be filing charges and we will be arresting people from resorts, houses or subdivisions who will prevent us from serving the warrant,” Maj. Gen. Robert Alexander A. Morico II told reporters in a briefing at Camp Crame on Friday. “Do not prevent us because we have the warrant of arrest,” Morico added. The CIDG now has a copy of the arrest warrant from the International Criminal Court (ICC) which will be shown to the senator upon his arrest, Morico said. During the Senate shooting, Dela Rosa was seen exiting the premises and CCTV clips showed him with fellow Sen. Robinhood Padilla who admitted that he kept the former PNP chief in his car. Morico said that portion of the footage remained part of their investigation but that it would be different if Dela Rosa were to be found in Padilla's home, which would constitute obstruction of justice. Padilla denied that he was escaping with Dela Rosa who only asked to ride with him after the shooting. He also defended that the entire Senate complex was heavily secured by police who did not prevent them from leaving since there was no local warrant against the former PNP chief. A manhunt is now on as the PNP mobilized tracker teams nationwide to locate and arrest Dela Rosa. Morico also said that the senator was still in the Philippines.

MANILA, Philippines — Batangas 1st District Rep. Leandro Leviste showed a portrait of his mother, Sen. Loren Legarda, on a wall in his office. He posted it on Facebook, saying with a heart emoji, "There is a beautiful portrait in my office." The post came several days after the Assumption Student Council encouraged the college's community to back a petition to remove a portrait of the senator from the Wall of Empowered Women. "This position is issued in light of the Senate leadership change on May 11, 2026 ...," it said in a statement posted on Facebook. Legarda voted for Sen. Alan Peter Cayetano to replace then incumbent Sen. Tito Sotto. Before the student council issued the statement, the board of trustees of the Assumption Alumnae Association, in a statement, called on all Assumption alumnae "to return to the women they were formed to be." The leadership change in the Senate, which solely has the power to conduct an impeachment trial under the 1987 Constitution, came before the House of Representatives impeached Vice President Sara Duterte on the same day.

- MMDA says early May rains exposed flood control gaps, warns private firms over drainage compliance (2026-05-22 05:32)

MANILA, Philippines — Metropolitan Manila Development Authority (MMDA) General Manager Nicholas Torre III on Friday said early May rains exposed gaps in Metro Manila’s flood control readiness, as the agency moved to tighten inspections of drainage systems, pumping stations, and private infrastructure linked to flooding incidents. Torre admitted that the initial heavy downpours revealed vulnerabilities in flood preparedness, with several areas inundated even after relatively light rainfall despite pre-season desilting and estero cleanup operations. He said the initial downpours effectively served as a “de facto audit” of the system, revealing areas where waterways remained undersized or clogged, drainage systems were blocked, and some pumping stations may be underperforming or non-operational. Torre said the agency was now applying a “surgical” inspection approach, targeting specific flood-prone locations to determine whether the cause lies in waterways, drainage systems, or pumping station capacity. He also flagged issues involving private concessionaires and infrastructure developers, saying some projects were found improperly discharging water from downspouts directly onto roads instead of connecting to drainage systems. He said the MMDA has met with concerned parties to demand rectification, warning that continued non-compliance could lead to public call-out and penalties. “If they still fail to comply with connecting their downspouts to the drainage system, we will publicly call them out,” Torre said. Torre said the agency was also coordinating with the Department of Environment and Natural Resources (DENR) on compliance checks, particularly on wastewater discharge requirements into waterways. He added that enforcement efforts were also focused on establishments and larger entities, not only individuals, as part of broader compliance monitoring. On waste management, Torre also blamed persistent garbage dumping for worsening floods in Metro Manila, waterways cleared by the MMDA were often clogged again within a week, underscoring recurring garbage problems that worsen flooding. He said the agency collected about 1,000 tons of garbage monthly from waterways and pumping stations combined, or an estimated 12,000 tons annually — consisting of roughly 7,000 tons from waterways and 5,000 tons from pumping stations. Torre also confirmed that around 80 pumping stations were being monitored in coordination with the Department of Public Works and Highways, with two previously identified defective units now undergoing repair, commissioning, and testing.

- Bato dela Rosa still in PH as police deploy tracker teams (2026-05-22 05:27)

MANILA, Philippines — The Criminal Investigation and Detection Group (CIDG) of the Philippine National Police (PNP) on Friday confirmed that Sen. Ronald “Bato” dela Rosa was still in the country as law enforcement intensified efforts to locate and arrest him. “Just like Atong Ang, Sen. Bato is still in the country,” Maj. Gen. Robert Alexander Morico II told reporters in a press briefing at Camp Crame. PNP chief Gen. Jose Melencio Nartatez Jr. announced that the manhunt for the senator was now on as tracker teams have been deployed to serve the International Criminal Court's arrest warrant following greenlight from the Department of Justice (DOJ) even without the issuance of a red notice from the International Criminal Police Organization. The PNP chief said all units involved had been ordered to apply maximum tolerance and professionalism throughout the operation. As soon as he gets arrested, the PNP will turn over the senator to the DOJ. “Our mandate is clear, but I am emphasizing to our personnel that operational discipline is paramount. There will be no shortcuts and every movement will be heavily aligned with existing protocols to protect constitutional rights and maintain public trust,” Nartatez said in a statement.

- NBI says search for dela Rosa ongoing, urges senator to surrender (2026-05-22 04:36)

MANILA, Philippines — The National Bureau of Investigation (NBI) on Friday said it was actively tracking down Sen. Ronald dela Rosa and would immediately enforce orders from the Department of Justice (DOJ) once the senator is found. During a media briefing, NBI Director Melvin Matibag said law enforcement authorities have ongoing operations to find dela Rosa following developments related to the International Criminal Court (ICC) arrest warrant and Interpol red notice. “We are right now looking for him. If we will see him today, we will arrest him today. If we will see him tomorrow or next week, we will arrest him,” Matibag said. Matibag stressed that the NBI was acting under orders from the DOJ, which he said would address legal questions surrounding the implementation of the warrant. “There’s an order from the Department of Justice to arrest Senator Bato. As a law enforcement group, we will enforce the order of the Department of Justice,” he said. Pressed on whether authorities would wait for the complete ruling of the Supreme Court before implementing the arrest order, Matibag said the matter of legal interpretation should be addressed by the DOJ, while the NBI’s role was to enforce lawful directives. The NBI chief also acknowledged that there was a “valid warrant that can be enforced,” although he referred questions regarding the issuance and timing of an Interpol red notice back to the DOJ. Matibag said there was still no official report from the Bureau of Immigration indicating that dela Rosa had left the country. “If you will base on the records of the Bureau of Immigration, walang records pa (there are no records yet),” he said, while noting that the Philippines’ geography presents numerous possible exit points. The NBI director publicly appealed to dela Rosa to surrender peacefully. “Mas maganda siguro, sumuko na lang siya. Kasi dalawang bagay naman yan—arestuhin ka o sumuko ka (Perhaps it would be better if you just surrender. There are only two options — you are arrested or you surrender),” Matibag said. He also urged the public to cooperate with authorities by providing information that could help law enforcement locate the senator, warning that individuals who knowingly assist fugitives could face charges such as obstruction of justice or harboring a fugitive. “Pag mayroong knowledge na puwedeng itulong sa (If there is knowledge that will help) law enforcement, I urge you to help the law enforcement to locate him,” he said. Matibag added that once Dela Rosa was arrested, the senator would be turned over to the DOJ, which would then determine the next legal steps, including matters related to the ICC proceedings connected to the Duterte administration’s anti-drug campaign.

MANILA, Philippines — The Department of Health (DOH) reported a 9 percent increase in human immunodeficiency virus (HIV) in the first quarter of 2026 compared to the same period last year. According to its latest report, the DOH recorded about 4,633 cases. Of that number, 4,381—or 95 percent—were males, while 252 were females. Despite the increase, the average number of cases recorded per day declined by 11 percent from the previous quarter, with 51 cases logged daily.

- Cayetano gets more flak from alma mater, this time from its student council (2026-05-22 03:52)

MANILA, Philippines — The student council of the Ateneo de Manila University Law School on Thursday said that Senate President Alan Peter Cayetano “fell short” of the ethical leadership expected of him as an alumnus. Its statement came a few days after Cayetano’s batchmates sent a similar statement regarding his role in last week’s Senate standoff that saw his colleague and ally, Sen. Ronald dela Rosa, escape from the chamber, to evade the arrest warrant issued by the International Criminal Court. “When our alumni serve in public office, their conduct inevitably reflects upon the values their alma mater claims to uphold. Consequently, when Atenean lawyers appear to defend impunity or undermine the great mechanisms of accountability, it behooves the Ateneo community to express our disappointment,” the law student council said. “In this light, the Ateneo Law Student Council believes that Senator Alan Cayetano fell short of the ethical leadership expected of him as an Atenean. His actions disappoint those students who look to alumni of this institution for examples of principled leadership. Furthermore, his commitment to impunity is a mockery of the Ignatian values that we were all taught to hold dear to the core of our hearts,” they added. Just like his law school classmates, the current generation of Ateneo student leaders called on the Senate President to reflect on his actions. “We call on Senate President Alan Peter Cayetano, an alumnus, to reflect on whether the conduct now being defended in the Senate is truly worthy of the principles of Truth (Veritas), Integrity (Integritas), and Justice (Justitia) that Ateneo Law stands for,” they said. The law students also called on dela Rosa to “cease his evasion of international legal processes and to submit himself fully to the lawful mechanisms designed to address the allegations against him”. “We call on the Philippine Senate to honor its constitutional mandate, to resist the temptation of institutional solidarity at the expense of institutional integrity, and to refuse to become a sanctuary against accountability,” they said. “The rule of law is not self-enforcing. It depends on institutions that take it seriously, on lawyers who live it, and on communities who demand it. The Ateneo Law School Student Council exists within that chain of responsibility. We are not naive about the limits of a student statement. But we are equally clear about the cost of silence. To say nothing in a moment like this is itself a choice, and not one we are willing to make,” they added. Sen. Loren Legarda also came under fire from her alma mater, Assumption College, following the events that transpired in the Senate last week. The school took down Legarda's photo from among its outstanding alumnae.

MANILA, Philippines — President Ferdinand Marcos issued Executive Order (EO) 116 increasing the minimum access volume (MAV) for pork meat to address the existing supply gap, ensure adequate and affordable food for consumers, and mitigate inflationary pressures. Marcos, through Executive Secretary Ralph Recto, signed EO 116 on May 19, raising pork import access from 54,210 metric tons (MT) to 204,210 MT. Under the EO, the MAV Management Committee (MMC) is directed to ensure that the allocation of the volume importation is fair and open to all qualified importers. The MMC has recommended the increase in the MAV for pork by 150,000 MT annually for a period of two years “to address prevailing supply constraints and price pressures, in order to ensure the continued availability and affordability of pork and processed meat products and mitigate further inflationary pressures on basic commodities.”

- Police have a job to enforce the law, says former PNP chief on dela Rosa arrest order (2026-05-22 02:58)

MANILA, Philippines — Former Philippine National Police chief Nicholas Torre III on Friday said it was the duty of police officers to implement lawful warrants amid the possible arrest of Sen. Ronald dela Rosa in connection with the International Criminal Court (ICC) investigation into the Duterte administration's drug war. Speaking to media at The Manila Hotel, Torre said the issue should not be treated as a personal conflict between officials or politicians, but as part of the legal process that law enforcers were sworn to carry out. “It's not about me or Senator Bato. It is about a process. It is about a system. It is about a law. And it is about a job,” Torre said. His remarks came as some Filipinos questioned whether dela Rosa would have been arrested if Torre were still serving as PNP chief. Without directly addressing the criticism against the current PNP leadership, Torre said police officers could not selectively enforce or choose whether to implement a warrant or not. “The job of the police is not to judge the case but to implement the processes and in this case, the warrant,” he said. Torre added that several lawyers and legal authorities have stated that the warrant against dela Rosa was legal and enforceable. He said authorities should “protect the process” and allow the legal system to “roll in its natural course,” stressing that institutions and the interests of the country must come first. Dela Rosa himself was a former PNP chief under the administration of former president Rodrigo Duterte. The senator, who has since been branded a fugitive by government after the Supreme Court denied his petition to stop an arrest order by the ICC, has been considered an enforcer of Duterte's war on drugs, which is the cornerstone of the former leader's case as he stands trial before the world court for alleged crimes against humanity.

- Padilla denies helping Dela Rosa escape (2026-05-22 02:25)

MANILA, Philippines — Sen. Robinhood Padilla on Friday denied allegations that he helped Sen. Ronald "Bato" dela Rosa evade authorities by secretly leaving the Senate building in the early hours of Thursday morning. In a television interview, Padilla dismissed circulating claims that dela Rosa "escaped" from the Senate premises, stressing that they left openly and without interference despite the heavy presence of police and security personnel. "How are we going to escape? There are a lot of police inside and outside the Senate, and there is CCTV. No one stopped us," Padilla said. Padilla disclosed that he had remained at the Senate for three days to accompany dela Rosa amid rising tensions that began earlier in the week after the senator returned to attend sessions following a six-month absence. Padilla said the atmosphere inside the Senate complex became increasingly tense on Wednesday due to rumors of a possible leadership change in the body and the expected transmission of articles of impeachment against Vice President Sara Duterte. "You can feel the atmosphere is different. There are armed men outside. There are rallies, there are heated discussions," he said. The senator also recounted reports of gunfire near the lower portion of the Senate building, which allegedly intensified fears among those inside the premises. Padilla and dela Rosa were reportedly in their offices on the fifth floor at the time. "Some senators were really scared. It was dark, there was no light, and the situation was tense. Some were crying. So, I went down to see if everything was okay," Padilla said. Padilla added that dela Rosa appeared more concerned about the safety of senators, members of the media, and civilians gathered around the Senate complex than about his own situation. "I saw Sen. Bato thinking about how to diffuse the situation. He is a policeman," he added.
